GINGER Rogers coaches Mother Lela for her "Major and Minor" role

ROGERS LELA GINGER

T WAS turnabout for Lela and Ginger Rogers when Mrs. Lela made her debut in motion pictures, playing the screen mother of her own daughter, Star Ginger, in Paramount's "The Major and the Minor." Mrs. Rogers, who had guided Ginger every step of the way in her career, took the pupil's seat while daughter went over part with her in studio dressingroom (top) just before scene together on set. Next day in projection-room (center), they watched rushes of scenes they made. Picture above: Both are happy! Look more like sisters than mother and daughter, don't they?

Editorially Speaking ...

NEXT to your own loved ones who may have passed on, you think on this Memorial Day of the men and boys-even the women and childrenwho have died and are dying on the far-flung and varied stages of battle, for this is a war year. It was from war years that Memorial Day sprang. Threequarters of a century ago Americans fought Americans. Both sides honored their dead comrades, and after the fighting the united

On this May 30 we bow our heads for all those, great and small, who have passed from the many fields of this world's endeavor. But in our troubled but trusting minds especially are thoughts of fellows like Billy Fiske. Young Fiske piloted a four-man bobsled to many a title, including the Olympic championship for America. He was presented the Olympic award for his team by a member of the German team that relinquished the title. A few years later Billy Fiske piloted an R. A. F. plane instead of a bobsled, met the Germans under different circumstances. And Billy became the first American to be killed in action in this war. There are many brave Billy Fiskes for whom we soberly place a wreath or say a prayer this Memorial Day.

As we do so, let us remember what was said by a man who saw for beyond his times. He said this in the days that gave birth to Memorial Day:

"In a larger sense, we cannot dedicate-we cannot consecrate-we cannot hallow-this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or deliact . . li is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion -that this nation (Don't you think Lincoln would approve if we add "the world ?), under God, shall have a new birth of freedom . . ."

HOWEVER spontaneous the music sounds, a modern dance orchestra is a pretty complex machine. especially on commercial broadcasts. These four pictures show some of the vital cogs in the machine. In the first picture Glenn Miller talks over a new score with Jerry Gray, one of his arrangers. The arranger is the spark-plug of a dance band. In the second picture Glenn listens to the effect as he rehearses his band from the control-room for his commercial broadcast on CBS Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Charles Douglass is the alert engineer studying the volume balance. In third picture Miller (left) checks

WHETHER you're a hepcat or hate swing to pieces, you surely recognize that "it" is still very much alive. If you don't, then you don't listen to the radio or go to dances. And you've shut your ears to the records that go around on turntables and your eyes to the records they mark up in boxoffice receipts and popularity polls. Especially the records—both kinds—of Glenn Miller.

You might check back to your May 16-22 copy of Movie-Radio Guide, and you'll see Glenn Miller finished third among all dance bands in the Star of Stars Poll. With the dancing-age public he's undisputed tops. For the past three years his band has romped away from the field in a poll of college students conducted by Billboard. He and his band are soon to be seen in 20th Century-Fox' "Orchestra Wife."

So get acquainted with Glenn Miller and his smooth-swing music, if you haven't already, for they'll be around a long time to come. Glenn was born thirty-three years ago in Clarinda, Iowa. When he was five, his family moved to a homestead in Nebraska, where they endured harrowing dustbowl hardships. They lived in a sod hut, fought prairie fires and tried to till the dry soil. Mr. Miller gave up the hopeless occupation and moved to North Platte, where Glenn first went to regular school and learned to adjust himself to community life.

Later he became a butcher's helper. That was in Grant City, Missouri. Glenn didn't care for meat chopping -but he did get a solid kick out of toying with the .butcher's battered trombone! The meat-shop man gave Glenn his first elementary lessons. But it was the town tailor who bought the lad a new trombone, letting him work out the cost.

When the Miller family—parents, Glenn, Deane, Herbert and Irenemoved to Colorado, Glenn worked his way through the state university playing in the school dance band. Out of college, he went West and joined Ben Pollack's orchestra. Later came work with Red Nichols, the Dorsey brothers and Ray Noble.

It was while with Noble that Glenn decided to strike out for himself. He sensed the surge of the restlessness and excitement of the time in music. But Glenn himself is a stable, conservative fellow. And he styled his music for exciting swing tempo, but modified it with smooth harmony.

If you like to be technical, here is something of Miller's style: The blend of harmony in his reed section is produced by scoring the arrangements so that the melody is carried an octave apart by the clarinet and the fourth tenor saxophone, with the two altos and the second tenor filling in the harmony. The brass section complements the saxophone set-up, lightly supplying the rhythm together with the drums, bass and piano. With this brass choir of four trombones and four trumpets and his quintet of saxes, he made his sensational climb to the pinnacle of swingdom.

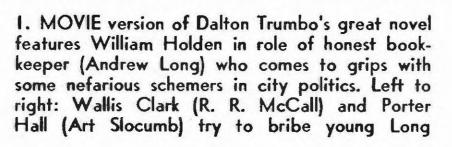

ABOVE: Ray Eberle sings those romantic ballads that elicit "ah's" from the girls. He's from Hoosick Falls, N. Y., has been with band three years, is brother to Jimmy Dorsey's vocalist, Bob' Eberly

THAT'S RIGHT—this is the same girl who caught your breath when you saw the cover of this issue! You've seen her in a lot of photographs, for Marion Hutton is a real beauty as well as a pulse-quickening songstress. She's a sister of jitter-singer Betty Hutton. You'll see and hear both Eberle and Marion in the "Orchestra Wife" film

6. SCHEME these great champions for justice work out to absolve, free young Long is carried out at his trial, with the doughty General (still invisible to every one but defendant) prompting him at crucial moments

7. HOW the General shows up crooked politicians through young Long, makes this one of the most entertaining movies ever filmed. Right: The General, Andrew Long celebrate their hard-won victory over graft

Donlevy As General Jackson in "The Remarkable Andrew," Brian Donlevy Is Magnificent!

Brian was playing on Broadway in "Inside Story" with an actor named Louie Calhern, Calhern, onetime opera singer, always gave a yell to clear his throat before going on the stage. Brian followed suit, and the gesture has been a habit with him ever since. Often called Ireland's answer to Hollywood's prayer for a man who can fight like a demon or love a woman with equal ease, Donlevy was born in Portadown, County Armagh, Erin, but IN "BIRTH of the Blues" he appeared as a cornet player

II EE-YOWP!" yips Brian Donlevy in the split second between the time the assistant director yells "Roll 'em" and the director calls "Action!" If soundmen and camera crews don't hear that signal from Donlevy just before they begin shooting a scene in which he's playing, they wait until they do. Won't budge without it. Now a legend on sets of his pictures, it began a decade ago when was brought to America at the age of ten months. Before he turned to the theater, he had obtained a well-rounded education, and a heap of experience as an aviator in World War I. In fact, he was only fourteen when he came home from St. John's Military Academy and announced to his parents that he was going to join the Lafayette Escadrille. Brian learned to fly in France, spent three years in patrol and pursuit work. That made him a natural for his "I Wanted Wings" role. And ever since he stole the show as the hard-boiled Sergeant Markoff in "Beau Geste," Donlevy's stock has been soaring. "The Great McGinty" tripled its value, and now his role as General Andrew Jackson in "The Remarkable Andrew," bids fair to hit a new high in his triumphs. Pose above shows you how Donlevy will look in the part; but you'll have to see the Great McGinty" picture really to appreciate what he does with his role as the shade of the doughty old General who serves the ends of justice well but insists that his young host serve him the best Maryland rye before he swings into the serious business of showing up twentieth-century grafting politicians through his own inimitable nineteenth-century tactics. As the Remarkable Andrew, Mr. Donlevy is magnificent!

ITH the reluctance of one facing physical pain, lovely, darkhaired Doctor Joyce Jordan knocked on the door of her sister-in-law's room. Not since the days of her internship had she faced a sterner task. Even the uphill fight to establish herself in her profession had not presented as perplexing a human problem such as she now must solve. How much easier it would be, Joyce thought, if her sister-in-law trusted But Margot Sherwood, neurotic, embittered and tragic, hated Joyce with the unreasoning hatred of the maimed the well. Joyce's keen scientific mind long ago had diagnosed the causes of this hatred but her heart refused to accept them. The truth was that Margot's horribly disfigured face, as contrasted to the beauty of Joyce's perfect features, was an insurmountable barrier between the two women.

Poor Margot! The automobile accident eight years ago that had branded her for life had left deeper scars on her mind. For six years she had lived in a twilight land her mind created to escape the reality of a world that had robbed her of beauty. It was weeks now since Joyce and her hus-band, Paul Sherwood, had brought Margot home from sanitarium. The girl's mental balance was restored, but even now she lived a bitter life behind locked doors both physical and mental.

In the past three days, Chester Hedgerow had changed that. For some strange reason the sleek, handsome and evil-minded Chester had encouraged Margot to go out with him. Joyce feared that her sister-inlaw was falling in love with the one person who could do the most harm.

Chester was the son of Joyce's office associate, gray-haired Dr. Molly Hedgerow. Only Joyce knew the heartaches the heedless ne'er-do-well son had caused the elderly woman physician. Once Dr. Molly, her heart torn with frustrated mother love, had even driven Chester from her home.

There was hardly a person in Lyndale who liked Chester Hedgerow. Most of the residents of the little town knew how he had caused his pretty young wife's death, but only Joyce knew the full truth. She had been the wife's doctor and, from the lips of the dying woman, Joyce had learned the ways of the philandering Chester. And Chester even had attempted to make love to Joyce. These were only a few of the things she must tell Margot for Margot's own welfare.

The drawn shades of Margot's room made it gloomy and uninviting. Margot sat on the far side of the room, her face veiled and turned away from the door. Margot always wore a dark veil to hide the hideous disfigurement of her features—even from Joyce and Paul. The veil, in some ways, lent the unfortunate girl a mysterious glamour, which probably was the reason she had attracted Chester's malicious attention.

"I suppose," Margot said, "you've told Paul everything.

"Is that why you didn't come out to join us at breakfast?" Joyce asked. Because you didn't want to talk to

"I didn't feel like having breakfast." Margot's voice rose a note. "Even if you tell Paul, it won't make any difference. I'll go right on seeing Chester. Neither you nor Paul can stop me."

Joyce denied she'd told Paul anything, that she had wanted to save Paul worry at a time when he was working hard at the newspaper.

"It's just that I want to warn you about Chester," Joyce said. "Did you know that Chester was once married?" "Yes," Margot replied sullenly. "He told me."

"Did he really? Did he also tell you how his wife died?"

"He told me what a lot of people believe

"Did he also tell you why he had to leave Lyndale for a while?"

"I don't want to hear about it. Please go away now and leave me alone."

"Margot," said Joyce in a gentle, quiet voice, "what do you see in Ches-

"He's kind - he's thoughtful - he's gentle. He's the first man I've met who—" Margot's voice broke and Joyce was afraid the girl was going to weep— "for the first time in six years I feel like a-a woman. He did that to me."

"Poor Margot—"

"Don't pity me. For the first time since I left the sanitarium I don't need to be pitied." Margot's voice was scornful. She pushed aside the dark veil covering her face and stormed at Joyce that people in Lyndale didn't know Chester—not the real Chester. With her livid scars burning red with anger, she shouted that Lyndale didn't understand the man she loved.

Joyce saw it was useless to argue further. It might only make matters worse. On the drive to her office, Joyce decided she'd speak to Chester during the day and tell him to stay away from her sister-in-law. There must be some way out of the dilemma.

Joyce thought of Paul, her brilliant, hard-working husband, and how much he had worried about his sister. Twice he had decided it was impossible for her to remain in their home, but Joyce had begged him to reconsider and be patient with Margot. Once Paul had lost his temper. Joyce had heard brother and sister arguing behind the closed doors of Margot's room.

Paul loved Joyce so much-so terribly much. It was true that of late he seemed to resent her professional life because it took her away from him. And Paul wanted children. Could it be possible that wise old Dr. Molly had been right the other day? Was Joyce about to have a child? Paul would be so happy. Joyce only wanted to be certain before she told him. Would it make any difference? Paul loved Margot, too. He felt duty-bound to make things easy for her. What if he thought Joyce was making his sister unhappy?

Things might have gone all right had it not been for Chester. Joyce wanted nothing to do with the man but was forced now, because of circumstances, to talk to him. But Chester didn't care to talk. Tailored and selfsatisfied, he was almost rude when Joyce stopped him leaving Dr. Molly's office later that day.

"We don't get along very well,
Joyce," he said. "Why don't you stay out of my way and I'll stay out of yours?"

"Nothing would please me more," Joyce said, "but staying out of my life as far as you're concerned also means having nothing to do with my sisterin-law, Margot."

"How old is Margot?" Chester asked, flicking an invisible particle of dust from his faultless sports jacket.

"She's — well, what difference does that make?"

"She's old enough to know her own mind and do what she wants to do. Why, look at what I've done for her these last few days. I've taken her out. I've talked to her and it's given her a lot of her old self-confidence back. Isn't that true?"

Chester laughed, tossed his head and walked off. Joyce knew she'd accomplished nothing. She tried to talk to Paul about the matter, but Paul, after some consideration, thought Chester's friendship for Margot was harmless, perhaps might even help her. At least, he said, it gave his sister something normal to think about. He told Joyce not to meddle and Joyce knew then she was powerless to prevent the tragedy that was brewing.

It broke about a month later. Chester. as Joyce had feared, became tired of Margot and wanted to get rid of her. They quarreled bitterly one night just as Joyce was coming home. Joyce met Chester on the porch as he was leaving. She wanted to pass him as quickly as she could, but he snatched her hand and, before she knew what he was about, threw his arms around her.

It was at that point that Margot opened the front door and saw Joyce struggling in Chester's arms. She was scornful and angry.

"Go ahead," she said from behind her dark veil. "Go on making love, you two. Don't mind me."

"Margot, listen—"

"Don't talk to me," cried Margot. Then, turning to Chester, she said, "I thought you were in a hurry, Chestera business appointment. But you forgot it the minute you saw Joyce. Was the appointment with her? Was she waiting for you out here?"

Joyce stood back against the porch wall. She wanted to say something but had no chance. She listened and watched with horror in her eyes as Margot's new world crashed about her. It seemed twice as horrible because Joyce could not see Margot's mutilated face behind the veil. They could only hear the girl's bitter, tragic voice.

"Were you lying to me, Chester, when you said you were in love with me? Was it all a game that you were playing?"

"Wait a minute, Margot," Chester said harshly.

"Wait? What for?" Margot's voice had risen. She was almost shrieking. 'So you can invent more lies? Why, you-you-"

Margot stepped quickly forward, raised her arm and slapped Chester a smarting blow across the face.

"Margot!" cried Joyce in sudden

Chester stepped back, rubbing his cheek. Then in a quiet, grim voice he addressed Margot again. "All right," he said, "you asked for it. So you thought we had a future together—"
"Chester," Joyce begged, "please

BUT Joyce couldn't stop the man. He lighted a cigarette and flicked the match off into the darkness. Then, disregarding Joyce entirely, he continued his tirade to Margot. "Why, you little fool." he said maliciously, "I'd no more think of marrying you than I would. That would be a fine marriage. Me and a girl who's spent six years in an asylum!'

Abruptly, Margot turned on her heel, walked toward the door. "I can't stand this any more," she said in a voice choked with angry tears. Joyce tried to follow, but Margot slammed the door in her face. Joyce turned on Chester with real anger in her ordinarily quiet, calm voice.

"Chester, of all the unspeakably cruel things to do! Haven't you any trace of decency at all? Wasn't it bad enough that you lied to her all these weeks? Did you have to taunt her with her illness—"

"Don't be delicate," Chester said callously as he flicked the ashes from his cigarette. "She wasn't sick-she was

Joyce blew up. "Get out!" she cried, her dark eyes snapping and her cheeks blazing with anger. "Get off this porch, you vicious, irresponsible—get out!"

There was a strange, foreboding hush when Joyce entered the house. She called Margot but received no reply. She called again. Still no reply. Joyce ran upstairs, knocked at Margot's door. No answer. She entered the room with the drawn shades. Margot wasn't there. With mounting apprehension, Joyce ran downstairs. She was more than worried. It's my fault, she kept telling herself.

She found Margot sitting in the kitthen. The girl was sullen, quiet. There was an odd note in her voice when she

"Leave me alone, Joyce. I want to be alone." She began to weep softly behind her dark veil. Joyce put her arm on Margot's shoulders, tried to comfort her.

"I know you're upset now," she said.
"But it will pass. He's the first man you've met. You thought you were in love with him, but you weren't really."

"You took him away from me," Margot continued in a strange, eery monotone. "You were always him. You've been trying for a long time to take him away from me. He had his arms around you. He was kissing you. You always tried to take Chester away from me . . ."

"Margot," Joyce begged. "Margot, it's late—let's not talk about—about Chester any more tonight. You're tired—"

If she could only convince the girl to go to bed. The shock had been too. much for Margot's tired mind. And she thought that Joyce had taken Chester.

"How can I convince you—" Abruptly Joyce thought of something-"Margot, I'll tell you something that'll prove you're wrong - something I haven't even told Paul yet."

"Nothing you can say will convince me," Margot said, staring off into space.

"I think this will convince you,"
Joyce said. "Margot, I'm going to have a baby. Paul's baby and mine! Do you think I could possibly be interested in Chester or any man alive?"

"You're going to have a baby!" Again Margot went off into gales of hysterical laughter. "You tell me you're going to have a baby—and you expect me to believe it." Margot's laughter changed to sobbing. "Get away from me, Joyce. Leave me alone."

Joyce looked at the girl with horrorstricken, understanding eyes. Her clinical mind had recognized the alarming symptoms.

Margot's mind had snapped again under the strain!

She was standing on her feet now and moving across the room. A strange light had come into her eyes. The expression on her face was one of unreasoning anger. She snatched a paper knife from the breakfast-nook table and moved relentlessly toward Joyce. "Margot," Joyce screamed, "what are you doing?"

But Margot came on. "I told you not to interfere. I warned you not to take Chester away from me. But you wouldn't listen. You couldn't bear to see me happy. You were jealous, Joyce. You were married to my brother—but you tried to take Chester from me-

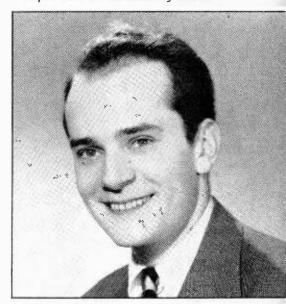

"Margot, put down that knife— "Yes," Margot said fiercely. "Yes, I'll put it down. I'll put it down into your heart. I'm going to kill you, Joyce. That's what I'm going to do—I'm going to kill you . . ."

Sonja Henie Takes Over Active Management of Brooklyn Dodgers; Red Skelton Chalks Up a Record on USO Shows; Reports Say Myrna Loy Has Exciting Plans

HOLLYWOOD By LEON RASMUSSEN

(Pinch-hitting for the East-visiting Evans Plummer)

BEST gag story of the week comes from the RKO lot where Johnny Weissmuller is making a Tarzan picture. One busy publicity man with a rush of genius to the head dreamed up a gin-rummy game between Johnny and one of the apes. After hours of posing, Johnny, not to his credit, found that the ape was into him for forty dollars, which leaves some sort of a record for gin-rummy fans to shoot at. Now Johnny is thinking of trying the white-tie-and-tails routine to smuggle the ape into the Mocambo to get some of his money back from the producers who are holding some of Uncle Sam's finer engraving once temporarily in Weissmuller's possession . . .

Perhaps this item belongs with the radio department, but it can't be just a coincidence that the Kraft show, which has been ambling along for the past few years with a Crossley rating of twenty-four, has since January jumped to 26.7. This rise is phenom-enal and more than a few people are explaining it with Mary Martin, who has been an addition to the show since the first of the year. This could very easily be true since the jolly Martin has proved time and again in her personal appearances to be a tremendous hit with the service men. Each week her letters from the camps run into the thousands. Besides having that infectious personality, Mary uses solid judgment in selecting her vocal numbers. Time and again the boys and other listeners have forced her to repeat her unique and catchy arrangements of "Pound the Table Polka," "Begin the Beguine," "Wait Till the Sun Shines, Nellie," and "You Made Me Love You" . . .

Back in Hollywood to resume her film career is Rosemary Lane, but the film career stuff is only a secondary consideration. Rosemary's real reason for being back in these parts is to be near husband Buddy Westmore, who is actively engaged in the Coast Guard. Rosemary left the Broadway hit, "Best Foot Forward," although she had a run of the play contract and it looked good for another 365 days at least. However, she went to producer George Abbott, said, "This is war," and asked for a release. George said he hated to see her go. That she was the toast of Broadway and a lot of other nice things, but he released her. Now Rosemary is a familiar sight at San Pedro while Joy Hodges, another transplanted Hollywoodite, takes her place in the New York show . . .

Last week we caught the preview of M-G-M's "Mrs. Miniver." It will definitely win the Academy Award for being the best picture of 1942. From it will also come other Academy Awards. Willie Wyler as its director can't miss and nominations for the acting awards are bound to result from the flawless performances of Walter Pidgeon, Greer Garson and Theresa Wright. It is one of Hollywood's "all-time greats." Words are too mere to tell about it. Just don't miss it whatever else you don't do . . .

Just so that we can say "I told you so" along about Labor Day, we're going to tell you right now about a new star that will come out about that time. She is Marjorie Reynolds, Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire's leading lady in their new picture, "Holiday Inn." To quote a local trade paper, which neatly expresses our sentiments, "She's got the kisser, the voice and she hoofs like a winner" . . .

While we were watching the rushes on above-mentioned Marjorie Reynolds, we all had a preview of some of the fall season song hits that "Holiday Inn" will introduce. Top one is Irving Berlin's "White Christmas," a beautiful tune that will be on everyone's preferred list. The novelty number, "Abraham," scores a musical K. O. that is okay . . .

At last report we found out that Red Skelton had already chalked up 164 shows for service men and by this time he has probably pushed it over the 170 marker. Red has been concentrating his comic talents on the out-of-the-way, isolated detachments of soldiers, sailors and marines throughout California, and more than once his audience failed to total over twenty men in uniform. It is these men, far away from real entertainment, that Red is thinking about, and they really do appreciate it and Red loves doing it . . .

With her husband, Dan Topping, in active service, Sonja Henie will take over active management of the Brooklyn Dodgers professional football team next fall. In keeping this Topping enterprise in the family, Sonja will become the first woman to become engaged in this bruising sport. In all likelihood she will keep her interests centered in the front office and not on the purely masculine playing field . . .

The switch in affections that found Myrna Loy Reno-ing for a divorce from producer Arthur Hornblow, Jr., is beginning to take definite shape in what the future will bring. Intimate friends say that Myrna will wed Dr. Louis Gunther, attached to the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital in Los Angeles, almost as soon as she arrives back from Reno. Meanwhile, Mr. Hornblow just the other day came in from the East on the same plane as Lana Turner. The next day Lana received a large bouquet of flowers from Mr. Hornblow, but it still isn't known whether it was meant for business or romance. You see, Mr. Hornblow will produce Lana's next starrer at Metro, "Quo Vadis." When we asked Lana if there was any truth in the report she would soon marry Adrian Samische or that she would have when back East if she had not been called back for re-takes, she aired, "If married every time there was a rumor to that effect, I'd have a husband for every day in the week." It's true too. Lana is taking the worst romantic shoving around by columnists of any actress in history and, if the truth were known, it isn't all deserved . . .

Hottest romance in town has Margaret Lindsay and Woolworth Donahue, wealthy broker, as the principals. Many were the reports that had Donahue pursuing bond-selling heroine Dottie Lamour, but it seems definitely that Miss Lindsay is the one. They met in Palm Beach a few weeks ago. Days later when Margaret appeared in New York for a radio show, Woolworth was at her side. Three days later in Hollywood they were doing the filmland bistros together . . .

Arleen, a lesser member of the troupe in comparison to such name stars as Boyer, Cary Grant, Colbert, Cagney and Hope, was cheered and mobbed by spontaneous fans at every stop. Her studio might take a tip from this. She is not the forgotten girl with the public . . .

A paradox indeed is Frank Loesser, Paramount tunester and typical Tin Pan Alleyite. Loesser, responsible for such hit tunes as "I Don't Want to Walk Without You," "I Said No," "Dolores" and other top tunes, has done a complete switch, and with composer Arthur Schwartz has turned out a serious work that will make history. The boys have written a patriotic composition, "The Moon Is Down," based on John Steinbeck's novel, and Rise Stevens gave it its public debut on the Victory Caravan tour. The composition, which is currently being translated into different languages, will be used as propaganda to be short-waved to conquered nations by the Donovan Committee. The sweetest part of the music to those peoples will be the message of hope it carries to them . . .

A star's most embarrassing moment. At a recent national broadcast from the Texas Aggie campus, the fellows were asked who their most popular stars were. The answers were Lana Turner, Betty Grable and Ann Sheridan, a Texas girl. Just then the announcer said that they had one of the three, Sheridan, on the phone right then and how would some Aggie like to talk to her.

"Annie, hello. How are you?" went the voice. The answer couldn't be heard, but evidently Ann said she was

"Annie" the Aggie student went on "there's always been one question I've wanted to ask you. When our football team went out to California last year you were to be our Sweetheart of the Day. Why didn't you show up?"

There was an awful silence, then evidently Ann said something about George Brent.

"What's George Brent got that an Aggie hasn't got?" answered the indomitable Aggie, and the receiver clicked shut the conversation . .

Don't be surprised if it clouds up and rains on Frances Langford-Jon Hall marriage. Separation is imminent.

DECK chair lets Red Skelton down in scene from M-G-M's "Ship Ahoy," a musical in which Red stars with Eleanor Powell

MOVIE REVIEWS

"Ship Ahoy"

Cast: Eleanor Powell, Red Skelton, Bert Lahr, Tommy Dorsey, Virginia O'Brien, Wil-liam Post, Jr., John Emery. A Metro-Gold-wyn-Mayer Production. Directed by Eddie Buzzell. Produced by Jack Cummings.

Type of Picture: "Ship Ahoy" is a musical comedy designed solely for music and laughter, and as such it never misses a note or a laugh. There is Eleanor Powell doing several spectacular dance numbers; Red Skelton and Bert Lahr pulling a hundred and one good ones, and Tommy Dorsey and band beating out with some swingy, catchy musical tunes.

This Is the Story: The entertainment value of the picture is its selling point and therefore the lightweight plot should not make much difference to you. This whole tuneful, dancy and funny gang manages to get thrown together on a cruise to Havana, Cuba. Some of them fall in love with each other but all of them get tangled up with a bunch of Nazi agents. It all comes out okay in the finale as they outwit the spies and solve their own love mix-ups.

Verdict: This picture, along with "The Fleet's In" ranks as the top musical of the season. Of especial note is the work of Red Skelton, who besides being a funnyman, is a very plausible leading man. The whole show is a oneway ticket to having a good time.

"Suicide Squadron"

Cast: Anton Walbrook, Sailie Gray, Derrick De Marney, Cecil Parker, Percy Parsons, Kenneth Kent, J. H. Roberts, et al. Original story and screen play by Terence Young. Produced in England. Presented by Republic Pictures.

This Is the Story: A Polish pianist (Anton Walbrook) and American newspaper woman (Sallie Gray) weave pattern for sentimental ro-mance which takes them from besieged Warsaw to America, and back to air battle over England, which includes exciting shots taken during actual battle by the Royal Air Force.

Verdict: Effective music helps this film, but Anton Walbrook does not measure up to excellent work he did in "The Invaders." Derrick De Marney does much better as the daredevil in role of an Irish rogue.

The Radio Front

The Singing Lady and Her Son Both Prove Their Valor; Blue Network Scores Interview Scoop; "Clara, Lu 'n' Em" Returning to the Air

WASHINGTON By LT. COL. CURTIS MITCHELL

This report from Washington must reach back into the early days of radio to tell a story of a mother and son, because that mother and son are symbols of a sort today that were undreamed of when broadcasting was young and this writer was a brand-new radio editor.

The mother was Ireene Wicker and the son was Charley.

In the early days of broadcasting the Singing Lady was a mysterious person, unknown to any except a close-mouthed circle of friends. Radio had several anonymous stars then: the Silver Masked Tenor, the Voice of Experience, Cheerio, and others. I learned the identity of the Singing Lady and printed the story, which would have been a noble chapter in the history of radio journalism except that I was completely wrong. I had been misinformed, and the real Singing Lady who was Ireene Wicker sent her lawyer to see me on the ground that I had damaged her professionally.

The first time I met her personally, she forgave me. She also allowed me to write her full story, which introduced me even more intimately to her and her family. She will not enjoy my writing these next lines but I am certain the occasion warrants them. Charley Wicker was about ten when we first met. Even then it was almost impossible to believe that he was the son of tiny, ninety-five pound Ireene Wicker. He was a hulking, awkward youngster with a mop of hair that swung over a high forehead and there was a proud unsatisfied look in his eyes.

His mother had that look, too, plus solid determination, which is what Charley had to find for himself presently when the world of 1941 and 1942 swept him toward a destiny which no one dreamed of when he was a kid.

XAVIER CUGAT took his whole outfit to Hollywood when he went to make a new movie, "Carnival at Rio." That's Margo with him

It is not secret that Charley Wicker was no great satisfaction as a son during his early teens. His mother, telling stories to children each afternoon, found herself faced with the problem of telling her own son that he was wasting his growing-up years. School failed utterly to interest him, except for football, and that was denied him after an injury which almost broke his back.

So Ireene Wicker, wrestling with the problem of raising a difficult son, told wonderful stories to her radio children, and those stories always had a happy ending. When there was a moral lesson to be learned, it was always that good triumphed over evil.

In Nazi Germany children were learning other lessons, but Charley Wicker didn't care about that. Nor did anyone else in America.

Yet, for all his youthful irresponsibility, Charley was one of the first to understand that England must not fall. He joined the Royal Canadian Air Force and came back to New York to see his mother.

The promise of his early teens had been fulfilled and at nineteen he was a young giant who could lift the woman who bore him with one big, strong arm. The mop of hair still lifted over his brow but there was now a steadiness about his jaw and his eyes and the words he talked was man-talk. He had one ambition and that was to become a Spitfire pilot.

In the days that followed, over Canadian and English flying-fields, Charley learned to fly and fight, along with thousands of other determined American boys. I dined with Ireene Wicker just after she heard that he had won his wings. There was great pride in her voice as she announced that her son was fighting the Luftwaffe; there was great pain there, too.

This was 1941, and the Singing Lady was just a memory to the children who had adored her. America was in the war. This was no time to tell fairy-stories while the horizon leaped with the explosions of bombs. There was other work, more grim but more important, that needed doing.

One job was a talk before radio educators at their annual meeting at Ohio State University in Columbus. Ireene Wicker made that talk. I understand that those who heard it will never forget it, and I wish I might have been there, too, for valor provides a magnificent sight.

She made her talk and she told those educators that now is a time when children must be told what America holds that is worth fighting for, and why children must grow up until they are strong and bold and then go forth to die

She spoke of death and her voice suddenly choked and tears came to her eyes and she walked swiftly from the platform. After she had gone, someone else told the assembled crowd that Charley Wicker, combat pilot in the RCAF, had just been killed in action.

I like to think that the boy who found himself at last as a Canadian flyer and the mother who gave him to a great cause are bound together in a new alliance from which will spring our own determination and our will to victory.

NEW YORK

Rivalry between members of the BLUE and NBC networks sharpens daily. There was great anxiety last

MILTON BERLE, "Three Ring Time" star, does temporary duty on the "Lawn Patrol," tells the M. P. not to get so tough about it week in the news and special-events departments of these networks concerning exclusive rights to carry a broadcast by heroes Lt. John D. Bulkeley, Lt. Robert Kelly and Ensign George Cox. Score round one for the BLUE, though, for permission finally, was granted that network. This is why: Hearing of the expected arrival in the United States of these Philippines warriors, the BLUE filed its request with the Twelfth Naval District Headquarters (San Francisco), the Third Naval District Headquarters (New York) and Washington, D. C. NBC, however, only put in its broadcast bid at San Francisco and Washington. Although the men arrived in San Francisco, Bulkeley and Kelly went on to New York City. Because of the technicality of not filing a request with the Third Naval District, NBC lost the miniature battle . . .

Every comedian has some jokes he reserves for his studio audience with the hope that the people will be in a gay mood when the program actually is on the air. Fred Allen's newest is about the woman who sees a man walking along one of New York's streets—walking with an exaggerated list to one side. She tells a policeman about the port-sided pedestrian and he quickly confronts the man. "I'm not drunk," the fellow insists, when the policeman asks him to "come along," and when the law asks why he walks with such a tilt, the answer is, "I work on the Normandie" . . .

Leading lady on two network shows is something that young girls dream about. But Betty Winkler has accomplished this, for she plays Joyce Jor-dan in the show of the same name and Rosemary in "Abie's Irish Rose." Always in demand, she was asked the other day to audition for the part of a Mexican girl on the "Down Mexico Way" program. The role required singing as well as speaking. Betty readily told the men who were conducting the auditions that she didn't know any Spanish. They asked her to try anyway, and she did. The singing wasn't bad, Betty admits, but the speaking—well, she tried to tell them that personally, she thought it wasn't good. For some reason which she couldn't comprehend, the men liked her part. Now this program is the idea of Vice President Henry A. Wallace. He listens to all auditions records, and when the one on which her voice was recorded was played for him in Washington, he remarked that he didn't like the pro-nunciation of the girl's. Betty didn't get the job, and, of course, she wasn't disappointed. She mentioned this story to a friend, who later passed it on to a local radio columnist. The scribe headlined his story: "Vice President Wal-lace a Self-Styled Radio Critic." When a new audition record was made—without Betty's voice—and taken to the Vice President, Mr. Wallace held

Charlie McCarthy has scored a grand slam with the nation's armed services. The NBC dummy, already serving in the Army Air Force and the Marines, has been inducted into the Navy with the rank of Chief Petting Officer. The induction took place after the Chase & Sanborn broadcast at the naval air station in Alameda, Calif. Chief Petting Officer McCarthy will wear on his uniform sleeve a super-duper special insignia, a Cupid with a bow and arrow.

Charlie isn't the only radio brat to receive recent service "honors." Red Skelton's mischievous Junior has been officially recognized by the Army Air Corps now. The 2nd Reconnaissance Squadron has adopted a special insignia comprised of Walt Disney's flying elephant, Dumbo, and the words, "I dood it!" Jest that it may be, it's an appropriate insignia and slogan . . .

Ransom Sherman can mark up the first week in May as the date of his funniest program, judging from the stacks of mail coming in from Army camps. The cocky proprietor of Crestfallen Manor scriptually enlisted in the Army, becoming, he thought, a second General Sherman. The scene in the recruiting office is being called one of the best bits of military tomfoolery yet heard, and there is considerable demand for him to carry on along those

GENERAL ENTERTAINMENT By ARTHUR MILLER

Few businesses are as unpredictable as show business. No one knows why, but lately there has been a demand for vaudeville. You remember vaudeville. If you don't, you're still under twenty. The movies killed vaudeville. And, now, vaudeville is coming back. No one can tell why.

One can speculate. Maybe vaudeville is coming back because the public longs for a lot of laughs. Perhaps the radio and the movies aren't able to satisfy the public, and now, after more than a decade, vaudeville is revived.

Old theaters from coast to coast are being reopened. No second-run movies are being shown in the majority of them. Vaudeville acts are being booked, and before long, there'll be numerous companies on the road "playing" Des Moines, and Dallas, and Walla Walla, and all those other cities old-time vaudevillians so fondly mention . . .

It's been several weeks since I've read Daphne du Maurier's romantic novel, "Frenchman's Creek" (Doubleday, Doran $2.50), and, in the interim, thoughts about the book have come to my mind on several occasions. Always they centered about the discussions which had been rife in literary circles which had been file in literally circles immediately after publication of the book. A comparison of the author's really memorable "Rebecca" was invariably made. But was this fair? "Frenchman's Creek" was not judged by itself. If it had been written by anybody other than du Maurier, no comparison would have been made. And "Frenchman's Creek" would have been universally acclaimed as being far suthe run-of-the-press romances. There were too many dissenters. This is the searching story of a woman who cannot properly be called an iconoclast, but who is individual in most impulses and convictions. As a character, Lady Dona is one whose every action is recognized, so adequate does she appear in the pages of the book. "Frenchman's Creek" stands alone. Criticism too often was made on the basis of comparison.

Review of Conrad Thibault's Career Reveals Rise From Church Choir to Opera, Concert Stage, Radio. Burle Marx Directs Overture to "Die Fledermaus," Sat.

By ROBERT BAGAR

New York World-Telegram Music Critic and Associate Program Annotator for Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York

ONRAD THIBAULT & CO.—that might now be the sign on a door in the business district of Northbridge, Mass., if long ago a quiet but determined little clergyman had not fired the baritone with the ambition to sing. It took a great deal of firing at that, because Mr. Thibault, who in those days did all his singing in a church choir, never gave a musical career a thought. Besides, nobody had ever heard of a Northbridge man making a living that way. While his parents were willing that he should be one of the minor satellites of the choir, they could scarcely envision their offspring in the "shady role of a professional baritone."

The little clergyman took his time, however. With infinite patience and arguments that finally proved persuasive, he spoke of the art of singing, of the great people who had taken lessons, of its meaning to the community. He had trouble enough winning over the family to his views, but the boy was still harder to convince. So the cleric took the youngster in hand and made him listen to many recordings by the world's greatest artists. Gradually, he achieved his point. When he showed the doubting Thomases that a man could be a baritone and still be a gentleman, that many fine gentlemen had written music and as many had and were singing it, that a God-given voice belonged to mankind, he proved too invincible.
"If it hadn't been for this dear

"If it hadn't been for this dear friend," Mr. Thibault told us, "I could never have made the success I have. I was on the verge of giving it all up a dozen times. It seemed too difficult a road to travel. There was too much competition. The work and preparation were indescribably difficult. But always there was some encouraging word, some gesture of friendship from him that gave me more courage. He had instilled such ideals in me that I considered it my duty to carry on."

Mr. Thibault is a robust-looking

Mr. Thibault is a robust-looking young man now, but as a boy he had delicate health. "When I was eight or nine years old," he related, "I just couldn't keep up with the gang. It may have been that I was growing too quickly. Anyway I couldn't jump as high or run as fast as the others. Playing football tired me out easily. I was such a wet blanket in all sports that I dropped them altogether. It was a hard thing to do, too, because I loved them."

He was always interested in music, however, even if he had no thought of going into it for a livelihood. He would sit in the choir loft, listening to the organist practise his pieces. And while his clergyman friend spurred him on to do that sort of thing, he also chided him for his apparent lack of interest in sports. He used to tell him, you can be a great singer, I'm sure of that, but one cannot sing unless he is healthy enough to make his singing sound healthy and full of vitality. Pay no attention if your young friends are unsympathetic. Go out and swim and hike and play ball, in spite of it. It isn't important that you do these things perfectly, what counts is that you get the most out of them for the sake of your health and your voice."

It sounds almost Frank Merriwellish, but Mr. Thibault followed the advice

termined friend helped Conrad Thibault, star of "Manhattan Merry-Go-Round," make the grade with a vim and he became the best athlete of his crowd. "I still remember," he smiled, "how my old friends beamed when my muscles became firmer. And once when we kids broke a window in the church during a hot and heavy baseball game he came out, gave us a mild lecture, then he asked who had done it. I replied that I had. He was amazed at the power of the sock I had given the ball, though, and he didn't mind the broken window too much."

Through the efforts of the late Calvin Coolidge, Mr. Thibault obtained a one-year scholarship at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. He did so well there that his scholarship was renewed for five successive years, during which time he was also sent to Europe twice for special study. It was on his first trip there that he attracted the attention of Emilio de Gogorza, eminent singer and contemporary of Enrico Caruso. Mr. De Gogorza became so enthusiastic over the young artist's voice that he took him under his wing and coached him in the operatic art. He is still Mr. Thibault's mentor.

The baritone's first radio experience was obtained over Station WCAU, Philadelphia, where he was known as the "Mysterious Vocalist." After a few operatic appearances in Philadelphia he soon won one or two radio assignments, and, presently, he was singing for sponsored air shows. In the past ten years his voice has been heard on many sponsored programs, which rather attests to his listener appeal.

From Waltz to Operetta

Johann Strauss, the younger, who was called the "Waltz King," had more important aspirations than the writing of delightful waltzes. He wanted to try his hand at operetta, a form of entertainment to which his native Vienna has been ever devoted. In 1871, the first of his essays in the field, "Indigo und die viergiz Rauber," was given its initial production at the Theater an der Wien, a house that had seen the birth of such masterpieces as Mozart's

"Magic Flute," Beethoven's "Fidelio" and others. The libretto for the Strauss work earned for itself a scornful going over from the local cognoscenti, but the music proved exhilarating and charming enough to make the production a triumphant success.

Another stage work by Strauss followed in 1873, "Der Karneval in Rom," and in 1874 came the durable "Die Fledermaus," whose libretto, this time, was acclaimed almost as much as the sprightly and melodious music.

It has been said of the Overture to "Die Fledermaus" that its form is that of a sonata. But Strauss had anything but a sonata in mind when he penned this champagne music. H. E. Jacob, author of "Johann Strauss, Father and Son," mentions the fact that the Overture is "a potpourri and makes no pretense to being anything else. Only his unerring taste (the most unerring since Rossini) was capable of welding so much wild beauty into the likeness of a sonata."

(The Overture to "Die Fledermaus" is listed in the NBC Symphony Concert program, under Burle Marx' direction, on May 30--Blue Network).

GUEST of "Telephone Hour," Mon., NBC, is Helen Jepson, soprano, one of radio's first contributions to the Met Opera Co.

"Music and American Youth"

The last program for this season in the series known as "Music and American Youth" presents a group of singers from Defiance, Ohio. A choir of 65 voices under the direction of W. Oscar Jones, director of music for the Defiance public schools, will deliver a program of considerable difficulty, as well as variety. The series began in 1934, and every season thereafter it has run through the course of the school year, that is, from November to May. Each week some aggregation of youngsters from a particular city appears before the microphone.

The idea, of course, is educationally sound. If we give a thought to the future of music at all, we must, perforce, consider the youth of the country. It is with them, naturally, that the future rests and the inculcating of musical principles in the minds of the young is as intelligent an approach as possible.

Hollywood, Musical and Otherwise

Louis Kaufman, talented young American violinist, is at present on a sabbatical—specifically a concert tour -from his work in the movie capital, where he functions as violin soloist with orchestras that play scores for the great films. He fairly teems with anecdotes, as would be naturally expected, since the fabulous business of making pictures is a great drama peopled with fabulous characters.

He was telling us, for example, of a scene being directed by Gregory Ratoff for the forthcoming film "Lanc-er Spy." "David Buttolph," said Mr. Kaufman, "had written a very nice little musical sequence, a Spanish dance, for Dolores Del Rio. The director and all concerned worked like slaves to get the proper effects, but something seemed to be wrong. Suddenly Mr. Ratoff's face lit up. The music for the bit was much too good. What was required was a species of tune or atmospheric music that might be suitable for a simple little cabaret

"So the whole thing was arranged afferently. The background was differently. The background was banked with people playing guitars— Spanish atmosphere, you know. And I was told to play the little solo badly, just the way a violinist in a cabaret might play it. Well, I did it so badly that everybody told me it was good. That's part of the game."

POPULAR MUSIC

SIX years or so ago Kay Twomey, a blonde and blue-eyed Irish-American colleen came to New York from Boston—object, to become a song-writer. She had done some versifying and such back home, more or less minor stuff, she says, but the big ambition was to write the lyrics for the songs America sings.

Miss Twomey wasn't here more than a month when a piece of hers, "The Pleasure Was All Mine," saw the light of day in printed copy. It didn't make much noise, in fact, it went into limbo after a few weeks. During the first year of her stay here she had six more songs published, written with well-known composers. Some of these were performed on the air, a few records were made of them, but nothing exciting happened. So far, not so good.

All that followed for the next three years added no glamor to her reputa-tion as a lyricist, though the natives, so to speak, of Tin Pan Alley, were becoming increasingly aware of Miss Twomey's gifts. She had imagination, they said, she had a flair for the unusual and she had, unquestionably, the instinct for fitting words to music.

She worked with many of the tune writers with little or no effect until she became associated with Al Goodhart, who has delivered himself of many hits. The first of their numbers was "Johnny Doughboy Found a Rose in Ireland," which is published by Crawford Music. Here, at last, Miss Twomey had the hit she was looking for.

Guy Lombardo and his orchestra introduced it and the telephone calls. the letters from listeners and the other, similar excitement were too important to be overlooked by the publishers. They went at exploiting the song ham-mer and tongs and today it is considered one of the two most successful of our current war songs.

She has another potential hit in work right now, another war subject. called "The K. P. Serenade." She showed the lyrics and to this watcher of the lyrical skies it looks like the goods.

Miss Twomey admitted readily that she has "lots and lots of boy friends," which sounded scandalously wholesale. But she explained, "My boy friends are all the men in Uncle Sam's armed forces, especially the Doughboys in Ireland." We didn't mind the clever plugging of her song; it was so intensely patriotic, we thought.

Short Waves

WRUL Beam Covers Madagascar

KEEPING abreast of the swiftly moving events in Madagascar, the engineers of the powerful short-wave station WRUL, in Boston, have rushed to complete a new beam antenna system which will completely cover strategic portions of Madagascar as well as French Equatorial Africa and the north coast, according to Walter S. Lemmon, founder and president of the World Wide Broadcasting Foundation, who visited Boston a few days ago to initiate an immediate series of broadcasts over this new beam.

Mr. Lemmon stated that WRUL, which has been carrying four vital broadcasts in French each day, will now add a fifth broadcast particularly designed to give the French inhabitants of Madagascar a true picture of the United Nations' stand and the pre-vious treachery of the Laval schemes for handing over French territory to Japan and the Axis.

Up-to-date information to form the basis of these special broadcasts is being supplied from reliable news sources as well as from dispatches of the United States Coordinator of Information. WRUL has been carefully observing the movements of Laval and his Axis friends and immediately exposing them to its world-wide audience. These recent broadcasts of WRUL have again drawn the fire of the Nazi Dr. Goebbels through Berlin broadcasts denouncing the pro-democratic activities of this alert station in America.

The evening French broadcasts of WRUL at 6:30 p.m. EWT each day are directed to French-speaking listeners in the Western Hemisphere, particularly to the large number of listeners in Martinique, Guadeloupe, French Guiana, Haiti and other French-speaking areas. They interpret the complete solidarity of the Americas and expose the Nazi designs to crush the French spirit.

In all its broadcasts in French, WRUL stresses the unity of purpose of the United Nations-to free all Frenchmen everywhere from defeat and despair. Each broadcast ends with the words: "Bon Soir et Bon Courage!" (Good Night and Good Courage).

Short-Wave Briefs

According to Fred Kaltenbach of the Berlin short-wave station, Churchill has had the effrontery to suggest that the Germans are using or intend to use poison gas. The German army has not used poison gas nor will it start gas warfare, but, he continued, if Britain starts it the Nazis will finish German laboratories are well stocked with new, secret gases of such potency and deadliness that it would be too bad if they were forced to use them . . . claims have stated that at the most no more than 1,000 persons were killed in Rotterdam. One propagandist put it as low as 120 persons . . . According to a Tass report from Stockholm the former world champion ski-jumper, Paavo Vierto, was killed when a Finnish scouting patrol of 240 men was wiped out by Red Army men. The incident reportedly led to a clash between German and Finnish troops, the latter resenting the fact that a German commander in the sector had refused to attempt a rescue of the surrounded Finnish patrol.

Australia Hits Overoptimism

According to a speaker over the Australian short-wave station there is no disposition in Australia to regard the battle of the Coral Sea as a Pacific Trafalgar. Prime Minister Curtin made out of the question. Japan has been building up strong bases in the southwest Pacific and intends to use them. Australia is passing through a grave period and this is not for Australia alone. The loss of Australia would be a tremendous loss of a vital base. It would irreparably damage the cause not only of Australia alone but of the cause of freedom throughout the world.

Diplomat Describes Ferry Travel

Diplomats who choose to make the transatlantic crossing via the Allies' bomber ferry service find themselves with accommodations that fall far short of Pullman car standards.

Sylwin Strakacz, speaking over CBS short-wave station WCBX-WCRC, described the trip to America made by General Sikorski, Polish prime minister, who conferred with President Roosevelt.

"A few parts of the bomber's inside equipment were removed to leave enough room for six persons," Strakacz said. "But there were actually no seats prepared for the passengers.

"During the long seventeen-hour trip, they had to accommodate themselves on the floor of the gangway extending along the bomber's interior. For more than twelve hours they had to wear oxygen masks, exposed to temperatures of twenty degrees below

He added that frequently, because of unfavorable weather conditions, the bomber had to change its route. When it landed, in fact, the bomber was about 1,000 miles away from the original destination.

Moscow's Summer Transmissions

Almost simultaneously with the start of Hitler's drive in the Kerch peninsula, Radio Center, Moscow, announced new summer timings and frequencies for its transmissions to North America. These are broadcast as follows (EWT):

7:40 to 8:20 a.m. (English news at 7:45 a.m.) on 15.265, 15.18, 15.17, 11.885, 9.567, 6.115

8:00 to 8:45 p.m.—English on 15:18, 15:265 megs.

The frequency of 15.18 megs is believed to be RV96, Moscow, one of Radio Center's most powerful transmitters, which has not been heard since last fall. The frequency of 15.265 megs is believed to be that of the powerful east Siberian transmitter at Komsomolsk, which for the past several weeks has been heard on 15.23 megs. You will note that the Moscow programs will be best heard on 15.18 when reception from Europe is at its best, while the programs will be best heard on 15.265 megs when the Asiatic stations are coming in unusually well.

In keeping with the streamlining of Moscow's programs for summer reception you will like the voice of the new man announcer who has a very pleasing American accent. Soviet programs are also being introduced with a brand-new identification signal which consists of ten piano or chime notes with a repetition of the same little tune over and over.

Frequency Modulation

John W. Studebaker, U. S. Commissioner of Education, Comments on the Value of High-Frequency (FM) Stations in Community-Wide Educational Programs

By DICK DORRANCE

FM's Symphony Fans

NE of the biggest headaches that confront any program director of a radio station is to figure out just what the listeners want to hear, and in what proportions. A partial clew, of course, may be obtained from letters which the audience writes in to the station and from surveys that are intended to reveal the popularity of various programs. But these ways are not always satisfactory. If the best-liked types of programs were repeated over and over again, they'd soon lose their general appeal. It's like filet mignon-if you had it served to you for three meals a day, seven days a week, before very long you'd learn to hate filet mignon. The question, therefore, is when does any type of program stop being a favorite and start being a bore?

A good program director is a man ho can sense the answer to this. Another task facing him is the maintenance of a balanced schedule. In other words, a program of swing music shouldn't be followed by more swing music. The listening fare must be planned carefully with suitable variety—just like a dietitian planning a meal with a certain number of calories and balancing out the proteins and fats against the carbohydrates.

Surveys, however, can be a great help in determining exactly what (and how much of it) the public wants to hear. There's long been a theory that FM listeners are particularly fond of symphonic and classical music in preference to all other kinds. The fact that they own an FM set is said to be proof that they appreciate better tonal quality and the clarity which frequency modulation offers. Surveys in all leading cities where FM stations now operate have tended to substantiate this belief and, as a matter of fact, only one dissenting survey of questionable value has ever been reported.

Last month, W53PH in Philadelphia canvassed approximately one thousand of its listeners on their preferences. From the replies it was determined that symphonic music ranks in top place with 40.9% of that city's FM set owners. Second choice was classical music with 21.4%, while light concert selections rated a good 18.7% top third. It is interesting to note that popular music-meaning dance bands and current tunes—received of the first choice mentions, far below the average registered in other FM cities. Incidentally, W53PH claims to have 76.5% of the FM listening audience in Philadelphia, according to survey returns.

Similar research was conducted last February by W45D, Detroit, and showed 82% of the FM listeners in that area picked "classical and concert music" as their favorite program material. The W45D questionnaire was not tallied on the basis of first-second-

You see why program directors of radio stations get headaches?

An Educator Speaks

Late last year U. S. Commissioner of Education John W. Studebaker commented very favorably on advantages to be gained by schools and colleges through the construction of FM stations. Writing to the National Committee on Education by Radio, he declared:

"I should like once more to call attention to the growing interest among school administrators in the establishment of their own radio stations in the ultrahigh-frequency bands reserved a few years ago for educational use.

"The fact that costs have been radically reduced should serve as added inducement to school administrators everywhere to give consideration to making budgetary provisions for in-stalling their own radio stations. I am told that an average school station can now be installed at the price one classroom. High-frequency (FM) stations can be used for intraschool programs, for community-wide educational programs, and as laboratory equipment for vocational courses for radio technicians.

"One city school superintendent now operating an FM station writes:
'I am convinced that our school people are not aware of the possibilities for service through the medium of radio. Their minds have long been tied to the fallacious concept of a great invisible audience and spectacular dramatization aimed at everyone from the kindergarten to the grave. We should have at least one hundred cities and counties in the United States using the five educational channels."

Some time ago Major Edwin H. Armstrong, who developed the system of FM transmission now in universal broadcasting use, offered to extend his FM patents to all educational institutions planning to operate FM transmitters non-commercially for a token fee of one dollar a year. His patents have been made available to the government for war work on the same basis. Many school systems are taking advantage of this offer.

This weekly column of FM news and discussion is intended as a Movie-Radio Guide service for the swiftly growing audience of FM listeners. Letters from readers are always welcome. We shall be glad to answer your questions and, if you do not yet have FM reception in your locality, advise you whether any is in prospect.

★News: WNAC WFEA WLBZ WSYB WCSH WEAN WLNH WRDO WCOU

While his listeners are used to hearing Harry Hagen, maestro of the Blue Network's "True or False" program, addressed formally as Dr. Harry Hagen, there are many who assume that the title is one of courtesy. As a matter of fact, he is a physician, specializing in orthopedic surgery. He broke into radio while still studying medicine, introducing a keep-fit and morning exercise program. "True or False," which he originated, is the oldest program of its type in point of continued performances.

Sweet and Low

Regardless of its performance in dance tempos, America likes its songs soft and full of sentiment. That's the finding of Arthur Tracy, the "Street Singer," following a study of tunes most mentioned for his all-request show on Fridays. Of the thousands of requests show on street of his service. Track has show on Fridays. Of the thousands of requests received since the start of his series, Tracy has compiled a list of ten songs for which he has repeated requests. They are: "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," "Trees," "East of the Sun," "Star Dust," "When Day Is Done," "My Blue Heaven," "When a Gypsy Makes His Violin Cry," "Chloe," "Play, Fiddle, Play" and his theme song, "Marta."

12:30 P.M.

Kay Kyser wouldn't know what to do if he had a night off. He likes to work and work hard. That's the reason he'll now make full use of Monday nights, normally a night off from his playing at the Meadowbrook Club in New Jersey, from where he's heard on the air nine times weekly. Kay is instituting a series nine times weekly. Kay is instituting a series of Monday night studio previews of his "College of Musical Knowledge," heard on NBC Wednesday nights. He figures that many service men who can't get leave to see him in action on Wednesdays may be around Mondays and can be his guests.

Serious Hi-De-Ho

The dream of almost every bandleaderalmost every bandleader—someday to write a symphony and hear it performed by a huge orchestra at Carnegie Hall—is moving closer to realization for Cab Calloway, whose laugh-provoking "Quizzicale" is heard Wednesdays over the Blue Network. Calloway has been working on his symphony for over a year now and expects to complete it for over a year now and expects to complete it in another few months. Untitled as yet, it is modernistic in motif and contains all the elemodernistic in motif and contains all the elements of American music—including swing. He has discussed his work with Leopold Stokowski and won the great conductor's enthusiasm with his ideas. The symphony is Cab's first attempt at serious music. He is a well-known writer in the popular field with fifty numbers to his credit.

Whoa!

When the Westerners, musical stars of "Reveille Roundup" and "Plantation Party," get to chatting among themselves, NBC staff members dive for an interpreter and a Western thesaurus. A typical example is the following, bass player Milt Mabie talking: "He was playin' up to a nester's filly, but a claimjumpin' buckeroo tossed a throw rope over her heart and they got hitched. Well, sir, he was dough wrangler with another outfit and was dough wrangler with another outfit and she 'lowed as how she wouldn't have to do no tepee warmin' herself. Then, coupla months no tepee warmin' herself. Then, coupla months ago, he throwed his leather leggin's over a knothead and now he's in the bone orchard, and the squaw, I hear tell, hightailed it to the slope and got hitched with a mule skinner." Translated, it means a cowboy up and married the daughter of a fellow living out a dryland claim. He was a cook on a ranch, so she figured she wouldn't have to set up house-keeping, but he tried to ride an unbroken horse and got killed. So she headed for the horse and got killed. So she headed for the West Coast and married a teamster. Simple as sittin' on cactus, huh?

Stepmother

Kay Fairchild Finds a Solution to Her Problem in the Final Instalment of the Fiction Version of Radio's "Stepmother"

This is the final episode of Wiley Maloney's fictionized version of "Stepmother," radio program broadcast Monday through Friday over CBS at 10:30 a.m. EWT under the sponsorship of Colgate-Palmolive-Peet for Colgate's Tooth Powder In preceding instal-Powder. In preceding instal-ments, Kay Fairchild in her role of stepmother faces the breakingup of her home by the unscrupulous Mrs. Luella Hayworth. Her husband, John Fairchild, loses his memory—forgets that he is married to Kay, that he is mayor of Walnut Grove. To force his resignation from office, Mrs. Hay-worth has Bud Fairchild, Kay's stepson, kidnaped. As the family has withheld from John Fairchild the truth of his illness, Kay is now faced with a choice between her husband and her stepson. Now go on with the story.

-The Editors.

AY did a lot of thinking that day. If, she reasoned, the people who were holding Bud could release him as soon as John's resignation was turned in, it must mean that Bud was held somewhere in Walnut Grove. It was possible he was hidden near the spot where he last had been seen—his news-stand in Turtle Flats.

Kay decided that night she could wait no longer for Andy Clayton or David Houseman to uncover the boy's hidingplace. She drove down to Turtle Flats herself and again went to see Pop in the little cigar store. Pop was timid and reluctant to talk about the disappearance at all. Kay finally did get him to say that she might look in an old box car that had been standing on the siding in the freight yards for some

"Okay. Thanks, Pop. I'm going there right now. I've got to find Bud and that's all there is to it."

"I wouldn't go there alone if I was you, Mrs. Fairchild. Wait—I'll—I'll come along with you."

They walked on in silence. Then, after they had come perhaps about two or three hundred yards down the main track, Pop asked Kay to turn on the flashlight. They were walking in the deep shadows of the old warehouse and, over in the distance, Kay could see the glow in the sky reflected from the downtown lights. It was frighteningly lonely here. Pop's footsteps became uncertain. He stopped and thought for a minute.
"If I ain't lost all sense of direction," he said, "we ought to be stumbling over that freight car this minute. Maybe I better use that flash, Mrs. Fairchild."

Pop took the light and directed its beam carefully in all directions.

But there was no freight car.

It was gone!

What if Bud had been in it when it was moved? What if he had been bound and gagged and hungry and even now was being switched around a distant city's freight yards miles from help?

Kay dismissed the thought. She wouldn't accept it. Bud must be hidden somewhere else. She and Pop sat on a baggage-truck while Kay thought.

"Bud just wasn't in that box car, Pop, and I know it."

Kay pointed to the rambling building that dominated the skyline. Pop told her the warehouse was partially occupied and pointed to a light in a window at the far corner. Funny about that light . . . "I'd like to know why it's there," Kay said. "The whole building is dark except for that one corner. And then, too, there's just one light. I'm curious."

"Don't pay to be too curious, Mrs. Fairchild."

"I know-you're always saying that, but I'm going over there and investi-But Pop refused to budge a step farther. He told Kay she mustn't go to the warehouse because she might get into trouble. "What's it all about, Pop? Why are you so frightened to go near building? And what's the light doing there in the corner?" "There's a room there . . . a-a

"Whose office?"

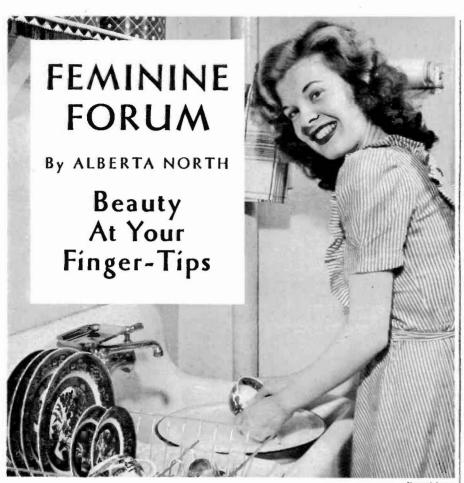

"It belongs to a guy named Mc-Kinney!"

After that twenty teams of horses couldn't have kept Kay from making an investigation of the warehouse, Despite everything Pop could say, Kay walked down the wooden platform to the warehouse door. Pop refused to go along with her, but, when she insisted, he said he'd come part way.

WHETHER SHE WORKS in a factory or on the home front, today's lady must keep her hands lovely and alive. Above: CBS actress Peggy Knudsen does the dinner dishes and still keeps beauty at her finger-tips

OU'RE working your finger-nails back to a decent length, making an all-out effort to do the mansize job your men folks left behind. And when you discovered that long nails were an occupational hazard—that you can't tinker with talons—you started a new trend in hand-beauty!

Your nails are shorter and rounder nowadays! And the well-kept, straight-forward, steady hand—capable of a firm grip on life—is the contemporary ideal. The plump, alabaster hands he cherished, fluttering fingers and languishing wrists (symbol of an era of feminine idleness, embroidery and patch-work quilts), went out with the advent of the equality of the sexes—the introduction of Kitty Foyle. And today, more than ever before, hands are lovely and alive! Work is no longer accepted as an excuse for grubby, grimy hands.

If you women on the home and factory front set aside thirty minutes a week—to work at the game of beauty parlor—your hands would remain impeccably well groomed. To begin with, tag as tabu the naked nail, beak bend and chipped tip. Take manicure aids in hand and erase polish remnants with an oily remover. Having scrubbed hands hospital-clean with good old soap and water, give them a lubricating application of hand-lotion or cream. Cuticles can then be coaxed back with a soft towel—of definite importance in warding off infectious hangnails. A base and two coats of polish (feather-tipped), plus a clear topcoat that seals in the lacquer, promises a manicure with an amazing "wearever" quality.

Emoried an eighth of an inch from

Emoried an eighth of an inch from the finger-tip, nails appear longer when polish is applied theatrically from cuticle to tip, particularly when the color chosen blends with skin tone. Colors, formerly selected to harmonize with costume or cosmetics solely, are now chosen with an eye to work at hand. Bright new berry shades created by Dura-Gloss offer a wide colorrange for ladies of leisure or women active "service." Dr. Ellis recently introduced eighteen "workable" colors that are blended true-to-your-finger-type.

Your nails—and we have this on the best medical authority—reflect your general state of health. Daily filing, correct care of the cuticle and a well-balanced diet make for strong fingernails. Growth actually goes on beneath the cuticle, and enamel polish, erroneously held responsible for brittle, chipped nails, is actually a protective, strengthening overcoat.

These are nail-biting, knucklebreaking days we're living through. Yet strong hands, sure of purpose reflecting the courage, confidence and capabilities of a nation's women—will help write the history of our times.

LEFT: Manicures are a must for digits in defense, hand-lotions should be applied often to ward off callouses. Right: Sudsy water cuts scrub-time in half, enhances lacquer luster

100 Will Be Chosen

NBC and Northwestern University to Collaborate on Summer Radio Course

OU'D like to get into radio, wouldn't you? It's possible your answer is "no." But you will agree that broadcasting is a fascinating and alluring field. A great many people find it hard to suppress either radio aspirations or at least the hidden notion that they have what radio needs.

On this quite human tendency, radio schools for actors, announcers, writers, etc., have long thrived—both the fly-by-night gyp-joints and the reputable, legitimate courses of instruction. A widespread criticism, however, has been that many radio courses have been too academic, too remote from actual commercial radio practise.

But now a radio network is itself going into the business of teaching neophyte announcers, actors, writers and directors—a hundred of them—as much as can be taught about such subjects in an eight-week course of intensive instruction—right in the broadcasting laboratory. The network is the National Broadcasting Company of Chicago. NBC isn't going to conduct its own school. It will collaborate with Northwestern University's Summer Radio Institute, beginning June 22, by supplying instructors from its own staff and by making available to the students the facilities of the Chicago studios.

Wynn Wright, veteran theater and radio director and production manager of the NBC Central Division, will teach radio directing. Martin Magner, who also directs professional radio actors, will be the instructor for acting. Students will learn how to be announcers from Charles Urquhart, an experienced announcer and producer of the popular "Vic and Sade" sketch. Radio-writing will be taught by Albert Crews, director of the Summer Radio Institute and head of the Northwestern University Radio Play Shop. An important phase of today's broadcasting is public service programming. A course in the planning and production of such programs will be handled by Judith Waller, NBC's pioneer in this field, and Parker Wheatley, Northwestern's radio director.

Lectures by these authorities will be only a basis for the courses. Students will also see and hear how radio programs are actually chosen, written, cast, rehearsed and put on the air. Demonstration and practise will receive emphasis.

NORTHWESTERN and NBC don't expect to turn raw material into professional radio personnel in eight weeks. But they expect to impart a sound foundation to the students. Some of these students will be present employes of networks or stations who wish to augment their experience. Most students probably will be college boys and girls or high-school graduates. Northwestern will give university credit if the student has the prerequisites for entrance to that institution.

The enrollment for the courses will be limited to one hundred. Applications will be received until June 1 or perhaps a little later. Inquiries and applications should be addressed to Albert Crews, Director, Summer Radio Institute, School of Speech, Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill. Maybe you're still not interested.

Maybe you're still not interested, and maybe you are. If you're one of the hundred—here's to your success. If you're not—well, don't say we encouraged you!

Buy a War Bond-Now

ONGRATULATIONS, Mrs. Muriel E. Eddy! Your yummy tapioca recipe topped 'em all! A Providence, Rhode Island, housewife who just loves good food, Mrs. Eddy is uncontested "Cook of the Month." Her tapioca "brain child" is one of the most original, mouth-watering recipes we've enjoyed sampling. And judging from platter left-overs—after Mary Jane Higby, NBC radio star, Otto Schmuck, Algonquin chef, and our photographer "tried some" — Mrs. Eddy's omelet satisfies—and how!

Prepared by the famous Algonquin kitchen, food center for theater people down the decades, Mrs. Eddy's favorite tapioca dish includes:

2 tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca

½ teaspoon salt
dash of pepper

¾ of a cup of scalded milk
½ cup finely chopped cooked
4 egg yokes—well beaten
4 egg whites—stiffly beaten

Combine tapioca, salt, pepper and scalded milk in top of double boiler. Cook over boiling water for ten minutes, stirring frequently. Pour mixture over well-beaten egg yolks, stirring constantly. Add the ham. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Pour into hot buttered frying-pan. Cook over low heat for fifteen minutes. Place in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for about five minutes, until dry on top. Cut part way through center. Fold and slip on hot platter. Will serve six.

Our tapioca winner is a delightful surprise when you're preparing his furlough "brunch." A luscious welcome change from barrack breakfasts, the omelet might well become "specialty of the house." And while we're on the subject of feeding our boys in combat, how about preparing food-bundles for "Bud" while he's away at camp. Barrack chow is swell, but it's a sure-fire bet that he misses those 'tween-meals snacks and refrigerator raids. His canteen credit can't possibly afford nibble-goodies, but yours can-easily.

If you really want to pamper his sweet tooth try a tin of last-long chocolate cookies. Chocolate scores a hit with the male animal every time. And since barrack "snack tact" rules that the boys treat bunkmates to home-box offerings, chances are he'll throw out his chest and announce you've "rolled your own" batter. A three-way recipe with economy of effort and price in its favor is tagged:

Chocolate Chip Peanut Clusters 1/2 package semi-sweet chocolate chips 2/3 of a cup roasted peanuts, skinned (salted or unsalted)

WHAT'S COOKING!

By GEORGIA SCOTT

May Winner: Tapioca Omelet

Heat chocolate over boiling water until partly melted; then remove from boiling water and stir until blended. Add nuts and mix well. Drop from teaspoon on waxed paper. Cook until firm. Makes twelve good-enough-toeat clusters. Alternates: Six marshmallows cut in eighths; one-third of a cup moist, sweetened cocoanut; or two-thirds of a cup seedless raisins. These are all possible substitutions for peanuts.

clearly. Gooey cakes and candies, unpreserved meats, crumbling crackers are definitely tabu. And for his sergeant's sake—make the packages small. Barracks have little or no storage space!

A travel agency with branches all over the country has made a specialty of packing Canteen Goodies for our armed forces throughout the world. Packed on order, food kits contain tidbits the boys voted for themselves-salami, cheese, wine jam, pumpernickel bread, candy, nuts and crackers. Prices, ranging from $1.50 to 3.95, include shipping (no matter where) and insured delivery. Heavy corrugated containers avoid breakage. If you're especially flush this week write: Canteen Goodies Company, 29 West 46th Street, New York, and send for their delicatessen assortment. You're maneuvering an inroad to his heart!

Cook-of-the-Month Club

"What's Cooking!" offers five dollars for the best recipe submitted each month which uses the basic ingredient suggested by this column. Recently this department announced the new basic ingredient for the month of June—a sugarless dessert. All entries for June must be postmarked no later than May 29 and addressed to "What's Cooking!" Editor, 551 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The winning recipe each month will be printed as a feature of this department; all recipes submitted become the property of "What's Cooking!" and will not be returned.

Mrs. Helen Cushing, Rockland, Mass. -Your favorite radio mother is not married, nor has she ever lived in the country, but her speaking voice lends itself well to homespun, simple roles . Betty Garde was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on September 17, 1907. She always had a penchant for theatricals, though her father, a Philadelphia editor, had difficulty at first in dissuading her from becoming a newspaper-woman. At fifteen Betty was thrilled, and slightly nervous, at being chosen to appear with the Broadway Players at the Broadway Theater in South Philadelphia. She stayed with the stock company for two years until her father went to New York to work for a newspaper there. It was not long before Betty made her way into Broadway productions, notably "The Poor Nut," "Easy Come, Easy Go" and "The Social Register." In 1933 Betty made her radio debut in a CBS feature called "Wayfaring Men." Since that time she has been kept busy with radio productions . . . Miss Garde can be heard on "Maudie's Diary" as mother. She also appears in "Crime Doctor," "Philip Morris Playhouse," "Mr. District Attorney" and "Joe and Mabel." Betty weighs about 135 pounds, is five feet nine inches tall, has light-brown hair and dark-blue eyes . . . Betty makes splendid onion soup, stew and veal kidneys sauted with rice favors tailored clothes for daytime; formal clothes for evening . . . says Dickens, Thackeray, Willa Cather and Somerset Maugham are her favorite authors. Like most big city dwellers, Betty spends much of her spare time shopping, attending the theater, playing bridge, or walking with her dog.

Mrs. Jas. Pressimone, Paterson, N. J. -When "The O'Neills" was on the air, JIMMY TANSEY handled the role of Danny.

Ruth E. Chase, Los Angeles, Calif.-He's married to one of the most lovely blondes in Hollywood, is about to become a father, is an orchestra-leader of no mean distinction, appears in movies, and heckles JACK BENNY. That triple-threat guy is known to millions all over the country-and the worldas PHIL HARRIS, who likes to wear sports shirts, denim trousers and cowboy boots . . . Phil was born in Linton, Indiana, on June 24, 1906, but moved to Nashville, Tennessee, when he was about nine. Phil was encouraged by his father, also an orchestra-leader, to play the drums. During vacation periods he played in his father's band, but some youngsters in Nashville formed the Dixie Syncopators, and Phil beat the drums. Ruth Stonehouse heard them, got them to go on tour, and landed them on the Pacific Coast, which was their jumping-off place for a year's engagement in Honolulu at the Princess Theater. Later Phil formed his band with Carol Lofner and journeyed to Australia for a year's stay. Upon their return, the boys took their band to Balboa, California, where they were a hit for two seasons. During this time Harris began to sing-and the crowds liked it. Then Los Angeles called and Phil went there, playing in a short comedy for RKO called "So This Is Harris." Later he made a feature-length picture for the same company entitled "Melody Cruise." After that Phil toured all the large and prominent (Continued on Page 36)

Mrs. Arthur Caton, Rochester, N. Y. -ELOISE KUMMER used to run and hide her face in the corner because the other children in a Sheboygan, Wisconsin, grade school laughed at her low-pitched voice. However, the heartless snickers of her schoolmates changed to glances of admiration as they all progressed to Sheboygan High School and Eloise walked away with honor after honor in dramatics Being a very practical young lady, Eloise learned everything she could about acting technique, and then set out to meet as many different kinds of people as she could. She went to Chicago and got a job behind the perfume counter of a large department store. While extolling the romantic possibilities of various scents, Eloise stacked away mental notes on that most mysterious of human species—women. She studied manners of speech, reactions, opinions and characteristics in general. At the end of six months, Eloise walked out from behind the perfume-counter into a radio studio, fully equipped to play female roles of any size, shape or form. This was in October, 1937 . . . Still after self-improvement, Eloise attends Northwestern University in spite of a heavy radio schedule . . . She loves the great out-of-doors, swimming, skating; is an excellent cook. Eloise is five feet five inches tall, weighs 115 pounds, has brown eyes and light-brown hair.

Miss Carlotta Evans, Des Moines.

Iowa.-Michael Raffetto has run the gamut of program production, from writing radio dramas to acting in them and putting them on the air. He was born in Placerville, California, of a famous pioneer family, which built and still owns the Placerville Inn. Moving to the San Francisco Bay region, young Raffetto attended the University of California, where he studied law and took an active interest in campus dramatics. He interrupted his legal course to go to Honolulu, where he spent a year stage-directing and acting, after which he returned to the university, finished his course, and passed the bar examination . . . But acting was in Mike's blood, so he went to Hollywood shortly after his graduation. Progress in the silent films was slow, however with the coming of the talkies he was in great demand as a diction teacher. In order to make more money, he went to San Francisco to practise law. While there he wrote a radio serial entitled "The Arms of the Law" and changed the course of his life. Mike impressed the NBC production manager so well that he was persuaded to turn to radio for a career . . . Mike is five feet nine inches tall, weighs 145 pounds, has black hair and hazel eyes. webbed cubby-holes was a rambling brick structure of about three stories. Pop told Kay it would be a "pretty scary business" searching it, but Kay was determined to go ahead with the task, even if Pop refused to go with her. But, frightened as the old fellow was, he remained by her side as they made their way from room to room, their feet making hollow sounds on the rotting floors. The flashlight was not strong enough to light the darkness of the cavernous rooms.

In five of the rooms they found nothing. The door to the sixth room was locked. Kay became excited. If the door was locked, it must hide something interesting. Perhaps-

Pop said they'd have to break the door down and Kay offered to help.

"No," Pop said. "You just stand back and give me room. There's a trick to breaking in a door. It ain't hard if you know how. You just put one hand against the lock and then you take your rear end-excuse me. ma'am-your back and-"

The door fell open with a loud crash -Pop broke the lock off clean. And inside-on the floor in one cornerlay the pitiful huddled figure of Bud Fairchild!

He was unconscious. Kay bent over him and cradled his head in her arms. His face was bruised and his lips had been taped. He was barely breathing Pop and Kay carried him outside. then to her car . . .

It was hours later before Bud could talk. His lips were torn and sore where the three pieces of tape had sealed his mouth. Now, after a bowl of warm soup, he told Kay and David Houseman how two toughs from Turtle Flats had beaten him up and taken him to the warehouse. They were working for McKinney, Bud said. and had meant to put him in the box car, but when they found the car had been moved they locked him in the warehouse room.

Kay and David sat near Bud's bed and listened to his story with rapt attention. He told them how the walls of the place were so thin that he could hear the voices of people talking in the next room—in McKinney's office. "Who. Bud?" David asked. "Who

wife, Kay felt new hope. Peg at last was treating her as a mother—she had her family again, all except her husband

"Mr. McKinney for one. Anyhow that's what she called him."

"She? Who?"

"Mrs. Hayworth!"

"Bud, what did you hear? Try to remember everything they said.

"Well, I didn't hear everything they said—just parts where she got mad and talked loud. And I didn't understand it all. They used such funny words. Once she was mad because 'the take' was light. What's the 'take,' David?"

"For the love of little kittens!" cried David. "Luella Hayworth! Our beautiful socialite!"

"What does it mean, David?" Kay asked.

T MEANS that the fair Luella is collecting from McKinney, Either for herself or for someone else and I'll bet that someone is in the state

'Collecting money?"

"Yes. McKinney's paying for pro-tection for his gambling interests. As long as he's allowed to run his bookie joints and his slot machines unmo-lested, she gets a 'cut.' "

David acted promptly. He put Bud's evidence before the state's attorney, and Mrs. Hayworth was arrested before she could leave town. A statewide investigation was started. Mrs. Hayworth was taken to the state capitol by state police. Kay knew that one of the most trying episodes of her life was finished, ended forever.

Some of the strain under which Kay had lived for months was lifted. With Luella Hayworth facing trial, Kay's thoughts turned back to the problem of her relationship with John. What did the future hold for her?

John recovered his physical strength slowly. Day by day he grew stronger until, holding Billy's little hand, he was able to walk the length of the hallway outside his room. Daily his affection for the child grew, although he didn't know Billy was his own son. He still looked upon Kay as a stranger. At last came the day when John was to come downstairs. The family made elaborate precautions to keep him from learning his true condition. They moved the furniture around so it would look something like the way it once had been three years before. John still had to be guarded against sudden shock.

Mother Fairchild helped her son downstairs and the whole family gathered in the living-room to congratulate him on his recovery. He told them he felt fine.

John offered his arm to his mother and the family made a joyful little procession to the dining-room.

"Isn't the table pretty, Dad?" Peg asked.

"Very pretty indeed." John turned to Mother Fairchild. "Well, Mother, aren't you going to let me seat you?"

"But that's Kay's place, John. I always sit here on the side."

There was a sudden hush in the room. Mother Fairchild stood awkwardly silent waiting for Kay to say something, but Kay, too, was speechless. Her face had lost color as she realized that John no longer accepted her as his wife whose rightful place was at the foot of the table.

Kay almost ran from the diningroom. It had been such a small thing, but its significance seemed so great. Even Billy had been given preference at the table, received the consideration of a loved one. But she was a stranger in her own home. She went to her room and threw herself across the bed and wept. Bud and Peg rushed up after her. Peg knocked lightly on the door and then called out to Kay. "Come in, Peg," Kay said in a voice still hoarse from weeping.

"Why, Peg," Kay said, after the girl had entered the room and sat beside her on the bed, "you're not through eating so soon?

"No. Bud and I left the table when you did."

"Oh, Peg! You shouldn't have done

"Well, it made us mad, Dad acting so-after the way you wanted to have everything especially nice.

"I know but-you mustn't blame

"We don't, exactly, but we didn't want to sit there-without you. And

Kay looked at Peg. For almost four years the girl had remained distant and cool. Now, for the first time, she was warm and sympathetic-she was treating Kay as a mother should be treated. Kay knew she already had won Bud's affection. Was it possible that she now had won Peg's?

"I shouldn't have let myself go to pieces, Peg," she said.

"Nobody could blame you-"

"It wasn't that I cared what chair I sat in. It was just that your father spoke in a way to make me realize the position I'm in." She paused. "It just swept over me that I-well, we've been married almost four years andto him-I'm just another woman.'

"A very pretty one—"
"Not now," Kay said ruefully, "with my eyes all red."

"Even now," said Peg quietly. "And

"VP57"

"This may sound funny, but you are pretty and—well, you're really such a swell person—"

"Oh-Peg. I-

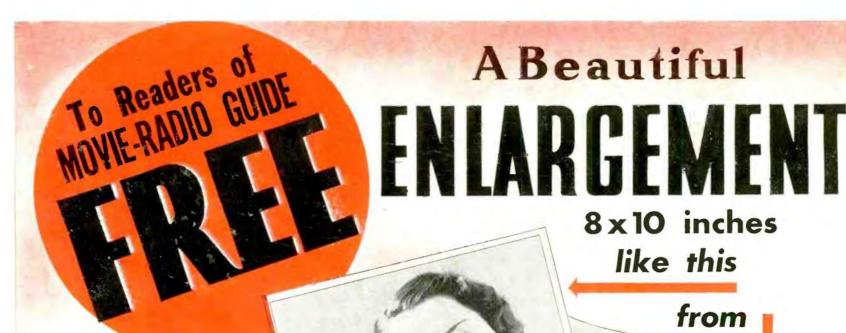

"And—and—" Peg was struggling hard-"and Dad fell in love with you once and I've been thinking"—then she blurted it out—"he'll probably fall in love with you all over again!

Kay suddenly sat up on the bed. She looked into Peg's eyes with new understanding. Was Peg right? Was that the solution to the whole prob-

K^{AY} put her arm around Peg's shoulders, hugged her tightly. Kay felt a surge of new hope. She had her family again—all except her husband. She had won the affection of her stepchildren and she still had Billy. Besides, she knew-actually knew-she could rewin John's love, rewin it in a brand-new way in a second, strange romance. It would be exciting and, somehow, thrilling.

That's why we want you to know about our beautiful color enlargements. Just imagine the pleasure of having that small picture or snapshot of relatives or friends in army, navy and marine corps, or of mother or father, sister or brother, husband or wife, children or other loved ones enlarged to 8x10 inch size to bring out features and details, and then colored in lovely lifelike tints WITH OIL COLORS.

Thousands upon thousands of men and women from all over the country have sent us snapshots and pictures for enlarging and coloring. We wish you could read the multitude of letters we receive telling us how much these people enjoy the remarkably true-to-life natural color enlargements we have sent them in charming black and gold or ivory and gold frames.

The unusual introductory offer we now are making enables you to get a beautiful enlargement of any cherished snapshot, photo, or kodak picture you may have—FREE—if you enclose the coupon below and 10c for handling and mailing. Look over your pictures now, and send us your favorite snapshot, photo or kodak picture (either print or negative) so that you can receive your FREE enlargement. Also include color information (particularly of hair and eyes if a portrait), so we can promptly send you information on a second 8x10 enlargement, beautifully hand colored in natural lifelike oil colors and already framed handsomely for placement on your piano, radio, table or dresser. Your original will be returned with your enlargement.

Remember, this free enlargement offer is made to acquaint you with the quality of our work. It may be withdrawn at any time, so act NOW! Send the coupon below with your favorite snapshot, print, or negative. Send it today
