The Mayor of the Town . . .

BARRYMORES have led the stage acting profession for many years. They have carved a prominent niche for themselves in motion pictures. It is, therefore, with pleasure but not surprise that we learn that Lionel Barrymore intends to keep the family name high in the radio billings, despite the passing of the great John.

It was John who blazed the Barrymore trail into the great unknown of the airways. Lionel's radio fame began when he joined John in verbal slugfests on the Rudy Vallee program. Later, as John's health failed, Lionel frequently substituted for his brother.

John, his last ribald jest delivered, is gone to his rest. It is up to Lionel to keep alive the family name in a notoriously short-membered profession.

He has done just that by launching his first starring dramatic radio series, "The Mayor of the Town," heard on NBC Sunday nights, presents Lionel as the chief executive of a typical American city, meeting the people and solving the problems which are so important a part of the office.

The program offers a splendid opportunity for the display of Lionel's special talents—and the dramatic talent which is part of the Barrymore heritage. It bears no similarity to the type of clowning the Great Profile indulged in—for members of this famous acting clan do not need to steal each other's acts and techniques.

One resemblance will remain, however, Lionel, picking up the family's torch to carry on where John stopped, will certainly deliver performances that are, in their own way, as outstanding as John's were in his.

Listeners are fortunate in having Lionel, for his studio, M-G-M, long doubted the wisdom of putting such top stars on the airways regularly. They have at last acceded to public demand, and by so doing have rendered an important service to the lovers of drama. To Lever Brothers, the sponsor, to NBC and to CBS, which will present the program Wednesday nights beginning October 7, a share of our gratitude must go.

There is a certain poetic justice to the part John Barrymore played in establishing his brother's radio success. For years ago, when the motion picture was a crude and flickering "fad," it was Lionel who pioneered the new dramatic form for his family. John followed Lionel into pictures and won fame and fortune. Now Lionel follows John into radio, and unless we misjudge the Barrymore talent, he'll go to the top.—The Editors.

BROTHERS BARRYMORE teamed on the Rudy Vallee program. Now Lionel (r.) carries on alone in radio dramatics

IT'S FUN TO BE SEVENTEEN!

That's What Teen-Age Star Joan Leslie Said When She Was Interviewed Recently

JOAN LESLIE completely upsets all precedents for a movie star of her age. While most starlets are running around to night-clubs, having romances, and trying to act at least twenty-five, Joan refuses to be anything but the kid of seventeen she really is. "I like being young," she said in a burst of confidence. "It's fun! I don't want to grow up. I don't like the idea of being, say, twenty-seven. That's pretty old, isn't it? At that age you have to be awfully poised and sophisticated—you know—smooth." But even though the idea doesn't appeal to Joan in real life, she comes through with a mighty "smooth" grown-up performance in "The Hard Way," her next picture.

World Series Dope Is Dopey

By BOB ELSON

Breaks, Slumps and Flashes of Greatness Spoil the Dope and Decide the Baseball Classic

Bob Elson, crack baseball reporter for MBS, was slated to broadcast his fourteenth World Series this year. It was in his capacity as a baseball expert that he wrote this article.

But Bob Elson will not broadcast the 1942 series. He has a bigger job in hand—in a bigger, more desperate world series—a series to be played from Berlin to Tokyo.

On September 14 the U. S. Navy called Lieutenant Senior Grade Robert Elson, D. V. S., to active service.

—The Editors.

SO YOU think you have the World Series all doped out, eh?

You've taken the still warm National and American League team and individual statistics, sifted them down—put each man involved in this 1942 World Series on the delicate scale of baseball averages, player against player, position against position—and from this mathematical analysis have distilled the winner of baseball's fortieth world's championship.

But have you?

Have you figured in the possibility of an easy ground ball hitting a clod of dirt in the twelfth inning of the seventh and deciding game? Of a catcher tripping over his mask? Of the complete defensive breakdown of a player voted the most valuable in his league? Of some insignificant youngster, or veteran, not even figured into the advance estimates suddenly becoming a super-star in the series? Of a great pitcher jamming his throwing-hand in a door on the eve of a crucial game?

Have you figured in these possibilities? No? Well, you'd better, because these aren't possibilities—they're actualities on which world's championships have pivoted in the past, and on which they no doubt will pivot in the future.

The inning is the twelfth. The 1924 Giants of New York and Senators of Washington are locked in a desperate struggle for a world title.

Each has won three of the preceding six games. Now Muddy Ruel of the Senators is on second and Earl Mc-Neeley is at bat. McNeeley hits sharply down the third-base line. A routine play. Freddie Lindstrom, the nineteen-year-old New York third baseman, moves into position, set to make the putout. Suddenly the ball hits a clod of

—Seymour
BOB ELSON, MBS sportscaster, now a naval lieutenant dirt, squirts crazily over Lindstrom's head, rolls on out into left field, and Ruel sprints over the plate with a world championship.

Thus is completed an amazing sequence of events the sporting world, for want of an explanation, calls the "breaks." For, but a minute before, Ruel was at bat. He lifted a high foul a bit away from the plate, and Hank Gowdy, the Giant catcher, whipped off his mask and gave chase. But Gowdy had taken no more than a few steps when he tripped over the mask, stumbled, and before he could regain his balance the ball dropped to earth. Ruel then doubled and subsequently scored the winning run!

The unyielding pressure of a World Series has squeezed strange happenings onto the pages of sports history. It has elevated previously insignificant players such as Pepper Martin, George Rohe and Babe Adams to the very pinnacle of baseball greatness, and it has cast super-stars such as Rogers Hornsby and Ty Cobb in the role of the most ordinary. It has produced the tragic spectacle of the "most valuable" player in the American League, Roger Peckinpaugh in 1925, cracking up defensively in the series so completely as to carry his team down to defeat with him.

Why has it done these things? In the first place, it matches teams which have been through the arduous mental and physical strain of 154 games during the regular schedule. These teams are thrown against each other for a maximum of seven games. The heaviest pressure falls on the Hornsbys, the Cobbs, the Peckinpaughs. The Martins, the Adamases, the Rohes, lurking in the shadows, nonetheless are caught up in the tremendous emotional uplift of the series. Therein, baseball men say, lies much of the explanation for the queer byways that World Series competition takes so often.

Any advance figuring of the Washington club's chances against the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1925 started with Roger Peckinpaugh as the strong point. His play had been of such a high standard all season as to cause his citation as the league's "most valuable" player. He was the Washington club's primary point of infield strength.

And yet, Peckinpaugh committed eight errors, including two in crucial spots in the final game, as the Senators were beaten in a series which went the limit. Those eight errors still stand as the record for fielding futility in the post-season classic. And they were made by a player who came into the series the "most valuable" man in his league!

Then there is the batting record of Ty Cobb; also of Rogers Hornsby. By every way of figuring, these men were "doped" to play the lead roles in their team's world title fights—Cobb in 1907, 1908 and 1909; Hornsby in 1926 and 1929. Cobb had won the American League batting title in each of those three years. In all, Ty won the A. L. crown twelve times, including nine times in a row! His lifetime major-league batting average was .367.

And yet his composite World Series average was .262. He hit an even .200 in 1907. He touched .368 the next year, but slumped off to .231 in 1909. The Detroit Tigers were beaten all three times.

Hornsby, who led the National League hitters seven times, including six in a row (1920-1925), went into the 1926 competition against the New York Yankees with a regular season batting mark of .317. He hit .250 in seven series games, but the Cardinals won in spite of his woful slump. In 1929, then a member of the Cubs, he took a .380 average into the battle with the Philadelphia Athletics. His five-game series showing was an anemic .227.

Contrast that, now, with Pepper Martin, George Rohe and Babe Adams. The record of these three is quite different.

Back in 1931 the Philadelphia Athletics, one of baseball's great teams, met the St. Louis Cardinals, just a bunch of ambitious fellows who had a tough fight qualifying for a series appearance. Chick Hafey and Jim Bottomley were the big men on this Cardinal club. The A's, seeking a third straight world title, gave them considerable thought in preseries strategy meetings.

Mickey Cochrane is author of the statement that one John Leonard Martin, better known as Pepper, didn't even get a tumble in those clubhouse conclaves. "I don't remember his name coming up once," said Mike. After all, John Leonard had hit but an even .300 in 123 National League ball games, and that's hitting on the weak side for an outfielder. He had stolen seventeen bases.

And then Pepper started to run. And hit. And field. He drove out twelve hits in twenty-four times at bat to tie the series record. He stole five bases. He was unstoppable, and perhaps more than any other man in series history swung a world title, practically alone, to an inferior team. And this is the fellow that not only the A's themselves but nobody else remembered in the preseries analyzing. He just didn't "figure" . . .!

Then there was the case of George Rohe. You have to go back a long way to pick up his trail, 1906, when the great Cub team of Tinker to Evers to Chance, a superb combination which won 116 games over the National League season—still the major league record—moved against the old "Hitless Wonders," the Chicago White Sox, top-heavy choices for victory.

ROHE started at third for the White Sox only through necessity. The regular third baseman, Lee Tannehill, had been shifted to short in an emergency, and the light-hitting Rohe, ticketed for return to the minors, came in to play the far corner. This, the experts decided, was all that was needed to assure a Cub victory.

And all the twenty-two-year-old Mr. Rohe did was to assure a Cub defeat! He was the series' leading hitter, and fielded brilliantly. He tripled and scored the first run in the opening game as the Sox triumphed 2-1. He tripled with the bases full to win the third game 3 to 0. And then, after the Cubs had tied it up at two games each by winning the fourth (they also took the second), he played a leading role, offensively, in the final two Sox victories which clinched the championship.

And then—Babe Adams. Babe was a young pitcher, destined for greatness, but he was a long way from being a great pitcher when he dictated the result of the 1909 World Series between the Pittsburgh Pirates, his team, and the Detroit Tigers, led by Ty Cobb. He had been up with the Pirates in 1907 briefly, appearing in four games and compiling a record of no victories and two defeats. He went down to Louisville and did so well he came back to the Pirates in 1909. His record in 1909 was good—twelve and three. But it wasn't such as to figure him as a winner of THREE games in the series.

But that's just what he did—three victories, each of them a six-hit game. His earned-run average was a remarkable 1.33. His final victory was an 8-to-0 shutout which gave the Pirates the world championship. Babe Adams—just a rookie, trying to get along!

Against the tense World Series background, the bizarre also has flashed from time to time in a further flaunting of the dope which says this set of games should be productive of the finest baseball of the year. In this regard, the names of Fred Snodgrass and Heinie Zimmerman come immediately to mind, as well, perhaps, as that of Ernie Lombardi.

All three—Snodgrass, Zimmerman and Lombardi—ranked as major-league stars. Lombardi still does, of course. Yet each perpetrated unforgettable blunders in series history.

It was Snodgrass, back in the 1912 competition between the Giants and the Boston Red Sox, who dropped the fly ball, a lazy, drifting fly ball that you or I could have caught, which opened the championship doors to the Red Sox in a bitterly fought series which went eight games—one tied. It was Zimmerman who chased Eddie Collins over home plate in the Polo Grounds with a decisive run in the 1917 renewal, and set up two additional runs which proved conclusive in the settlement of the world title of that year.

AND it was Lombardi, the hard-working catcher of the Cincinnati Reds, who put on the now-famous "snooze" act to make the Reds' rout by the Yankees in the 1939 competition complete, final and humiliating. And all had the misfortune to unfold those travesties at a time when the glare was the most intense, when their actions stood out in such bold relief as to make them unforgettable.

One last clincher in this series to show how dopey the World Series dope can be. This one involves the important baseball by-product, strategy, and carries us back to the 1933 battle between the New York Giants and the Washington Senators. We are in the fifth game, with the Giants leading the series three games to one, but with Joe Cronin's Senators fighting back desperately. Now, in the eleventh inning, the Senators,

MAUREEN O'HARA: Home Girl

Acting Is Maureen O'Hara's Business; But Her Dreams Are Built Around Her Own Fireside!

MAUREEN O'HARA typifies the spirit of war-time Hollywood in her sane and sensible attitude toward her work and her future. She looks upon being a movie actress as a business career, not as a glamour whirl. And when the shouting and tumult of the war years die, she and her husband, Will Price, film dialog director, are going to settle down in Dixie on their cotton plantation. Both look forward to the day when they will join the landed gentry of Mississippi.

Calm and deliberate in her actions and decisions, Maureen keeps the sense of values she developed as the oldest in a family of six children. Just teaching three sisters and two brothers how to walk probably helped. She hates fancy clothes, large parties and insincerity. And flattery, which was the chief stock in trade of the old Hollywood, leaves her cold. There's nothing superficial about this Irish-born, red-haired lass. On the screen, her beauty is pronounced; but at her own fireside, the love of home that shines out from that beauty glorifies it!

PART 6

8:30 a.m. PWT, sponsored by General Mills for Bisquick and Gold Medal Flour.

Joan Scott left Fairville, Ohio, to go to Chicago after the death of her husband. The couple had been falsely accused of crime, and Joan was determined to build a new life and clear her husband's name. At the Chicago station, a stranger threw his arms around her, introduced her to his father, swept her off in a limousine. He was Jeff Clark, son of T. R. Clark, wealthy publisher. Jeff was involved with Margie Cook, a fortune-seeking dancer. He had told his father that his fiancée was arriving, and the older man decided to meet her at the train. Jeff, knowing that T. R. Clark would not approve of "Cookie," took him to the wrong station, saw Joan, and begged her to play the part of fiancée. Joan agreed only because detectives were about to arrest her and the introduction offered a chance to escape.

The situation becomes involved when T. R., liking Joan, announces the engagement in his newspaper. This angers Joan, but she agrees to pose as Jeff's fiancée for a month. T. R. then demands an explanation from Jeff and learns about Cookie. She, too, doesn't like this turn of events and unsuccessfully tries to see Jeff's father.

Meanwhile Cookie has been charging expensive purchases to Clark's account. When T. R. receives the bills he is furious. Joan quiets him down, suggests that Jeff, granted more freedom, might find he doesn't love Cookie. He follows Joan's advice, agrees to have Cookie to dinner some night. Jeff, surprised at the change in his father, celebrates by taking Joan out, breaking a date with Cookie to do so.

As a result, Cookie decides to have a showdown with Joan. Meeting her by accident in the beauty parlor next day, Cookie threatens to take the story to the newspapers. This, Joan knows, will bring the police, ending forever her chance to clear Tubby's name. Now go on with the story.—The Editors.

MISS MARGIE COOK was not one to let grass grow under her feet. She was suspicious of Joan Scott and Joan Scott's motives concerning young Jeffrey Clark. Therefore, Cookie, who had ways of getting what she wanted, forced Jeff to set a specific date for dinner at the Clark home. Jeff tried to hedge. He knew his father had promised to have Cookie some evening, but during the past days T. R. Clark had cooled decidedly toward the invitation. However, Jeff told Cookie the dinner would be held on the following Monday.

Pamela Stanley, Jeff's socialite cousin, meanwhile had learned about the whole situation. She knew that Joan was trying bravely to carry out Clark's plan of avoiding publicity by posing as Jeff's fiancée, but Pamela had ideas of her own.

Very late that same evening, Joan

Scott was reading in the huge, satin-stuffed bed in her rooms at the Clark home. A light from the reading-lamp cast shadows throughout the enormous room. Joan Scott looked up from her book. She was surrounded by luxury she never had known existed. She sat there for a while, thinking about how she happened to come upon this luxury.

One day she had been a widow—poor, friendless, in a big city. The next day, through a strange assortment of circumstances, she was supposedly the fiancée of Jeffrey Clark. At first this ruse had served its purpose. She had escaped the police. But now it was becoming more and more complicated. The girl Jeff really intended to marry threatened to expose her. Joan reviewed the situation in her mind, but could find no solution. Abruptly there came a quiet knock on the door and Pamela Stanley walked into the room.

"A fine state of affairs, I must say," said Pamela. "You sitting home reading a book while Jeff takes out that Margie Cook?"

"Oh," Joan explained, smiling, "he asked me to go out tonight, Pamela, but I . . . I didn't feel up to it. And, after all, why shouldn't he take out Cookie? She's the one he's going to marry, not me."

Joan didn't explain that Cookie had called earlier in the day and had forced Joan to break her date with Jeff on threat of exposing the whole story to the newspapers. Joan believed in letting well enough alone. Pamela was different.

"I just had a long talk with T. R.," Pamela said. "He told me quite a lot about Cookie. She's just the kind of little gold-digger I thought she was."

"Gold-digger?" Joan asked laughing. "Pamela, I wonder if you're not wrong about Cookie. Jeff seems to be terribly much in love with her."

"Those words 'seems to be' just about sum up the whole situation. Jeff only thinks he's in love with her, and as far as she's concerned—"

"You don't believe she cares anything about him?" asked Joan, interrupting.

READ WHY FRANCHOT TONE HASN'T JOINED THE ARMED FORCES!

HOLLYWOOD By FRANCES LONG

Son of a hero. In America today there's a small eight-year-old boy by the name of Patrick Devereux. His mother died of a broken heart in Washington, D. C., not so long ago. His father is Major James Devereux, Marine hero, who became a Japanese prisoner of war in the battle of the Pacific. Which left Patrick practically an orphan. But not for long; in fact, he's to have a real home, because Brian Donlevy, who played the star role in "Wake Island," is going to adopt the boy if plans in the making now work out . . .

Answering a query. People who have wondered and asked why Franchot Tone has done nothing toward entering active service of America's armed forces, and why he has not been inducted, may be surprised to learn that Tone, an ardent patriot, has been more than eager to get into some branch of the service. But the real fact of the matter is that his last illness, which necessitated a major operation, left him in a very weakened condition, and one from which Mr. Tone hardly pulled through. Even now any over-activity would prove fatal. This is the first time the fact has been printed, but we feel that Franchot should not be called a slacker when he has a handicap he can do nothing about . . .

First Hollywood romance to give Cupid's doings an international slant is that of Dinah Shore and Lieut. Jimmy Stewart of the American Air Forces. Movietown has it that their interest in each other is really serious, and with Jimmy scheduled to go overseas soon, the affair assumes an international aspect. What with Dinah being so popular with the A. E. F., she will probably be flying across soon to entertain American boys over there . . .

Margaret Hayes is still driving Jeffrey Lynn's station-wagon, but Jeffrey hasn't called at Maggie's for the socks she was knitting for him when he went into service, now he's on leave in Hollywood. Meantime, Leif Erikson, who made headlines by his quickie marriage and separation from La Hayes, has joined the Navy as a photographer and reported for duty . . .

Actors turn producers. Charles Boyer was the first one on the list and is now making "Flesh and Fantasy." Jack Benny followed suit and is making great preparations to start production this winter. And the latest to join the producer ranks in Hollywood is Jimmy Walker, erstwhile mayor of New York City and still one of her best lawyers. Maybe we shouldn't put Mr. Walker in the actor class; but then again, why not? He certainly put on a good show when he was head man (Continued on Page Facing 36)

MOVIE REVIEW

“A Yank at Eton”

Cast: Mickey Rooney, Freddie Bartholomew, Edmund Gwenn, Ian Hunter, Juanita Quigley, Marta Linden, Tina Thayer, Peter Lawford, Raymond Severn. An M-G-M production, directed by Norman Taurog and produced by John Considine, Jr. Screenplay by George Oppenheimer, Lionel Houser and Thomas Phipps, from the original story by Oppenheimer.

Mickey Rooney plays role of “Yank at Eton”

Type of Picture: A typical Mickey Rooney film, in usual homey vein, but with subtle propaganda the underlying theme.

This is the Story: Mickey and his sister are having a high old time at a football game when they get word that their mother has remarried and wants them to come to England to live. Neither wants to leave America, and go resolved to dislike their new stepfather. When Mickey learns that he has to go to Eton, it's the last straw. Of course he gets into trouble, and matters aren't smoothed when he refuses the help of his stepbrother, Freddie Bartholomew. The Mick's new screen sweetheart, Tina Thayer, in the role of a scatter-brained social climber, adds to the complications. How Mickey gets in and out of scrapes at the famous English boys' school forms the plot cemented with laughs.

Verdict: Camouflaged with fun a la Rooney, the picture attempts to cement a feeling of friendliness between England and the United States.—Family.

BERLIN'S SHOW GOES TO WASHINGTON . . . KYSER HEADS OWI RADIO CAMPAIGN

WASHINGTON

By LT. COL. CURTIS MITCHELL

The opening of the Irving Berlin "This Is the Army" box-office on a downtown street in Washington almost stopped traffic. It opened on a Monday morning at ten o'clock. Earlier, a detail of four soldiers came to town with the tickets and stories and pictures for the newspapers. When the news got around, every newspaper in town, as well as the War Department, was flooded with calls which asked where the box-office would be located.

On Monday morning, military policemen and Army noncoms opened the box-office window and the deluge began. The line was three blocks long at one time. Washington wants to go to "This Is the Army" despite the high prices. Opening night admission will be $16.50 for the entire orchestra and $5.50 for most of the balcony. Other nights the orchestra seats will be $5.50 with balcony seats running down to $1.65 . . .

Do you want to help your Army? You can do it by getting some young man who has a radio or mechanical background to enlist in the Army Signal Corps, the Army Air Forces, or the Army Ordnance Department. There is a great shortage of technical men. The advancement is rapid. The pay is good. Any youth who knows the inside of a radio should enlist at once. Any man who can tinker with engines and differentials is needed for tanks and trucks and that need is immediate. People who have been saying "What can I do?" can start to work right now. Do you know anyone who qualifies? Call him up now and tell him to get in touch with the nearest Army recruiting officer or station . . .

The Waves, to the Navy what the Waacs are to the Army, are looking for women radio operators, or those who have special radio knowledge. Women between the ages of twenty and thirty-six interested in this field can get application blanks at the nearest office of Naval Officer Procurement. Those selected will attend a four-month course in radio communications at the University of Wisconsin at Madison. Pay will be the same as for Navy men of the same classification . . .

Those who enjoyed Elmer Davis' nightly commentary on the news soon will be listening to him again if Washington's grapevine rumor is correct. Talk is that Davis, now chief of the Office of War Information, will return to the air for a fifteen-minute program weekly, broadcast simultaneously on all major networks. Business of clearing the time already is said to have begun . . .

Here are some interesting figures just released by the Treasury Department. In connection with the "Stars Over America" tours, which are being promoted by Hollywood to push bond sales, Irene Dunne sold $850,000 worth of this best investment in the world at a luncheon in Bethlehem, Pa., and was credited with the sale of $1,120,500 worth in Easton, Pa. Greer Garson accounted for $100,000 worth in Harrisburg, Pa., and $161,500 in Winchester, Va. Charles Laughton, Ann Rutherford and Virginia Gilmore, in Woonsocket, R. I., sold $225,000 worth, and $485,000 worth in Worcester. These are box-car figures, but they're only part of what the movie-radio twins are doing to boost the sale of bonds.

The Office of War Information will enroll radio in an effort to sell the war to the home front, the labor front, and the boys who make up the war front. One of the main objectives will be to hypo labor into stepping up war production. Increased use of radio to acquaint us with possible meat-rationing, high cost of living and conservation of fuel and gas will be a front-liner. A committee of twenty-five of the biggest names in radio, headed by Kay Kyser, will be the selling-agent for the greatest sponsor of them all—the U. S. A. . . .

To hear Harry Salter tell it, he owes his happiness to "Hobby Lobby." Harry has been musical director of the program since it first hit the airwaves. His bride, Roberta Semple, did research for "Hobby Lobby," and it was at a recent program that they met and became charmed by a nine-year-old, the daughter of French refugees. The Salters are taking the young 'un under their wings until her parents can make a home for her . . .

A new form of the art of strip-tease is now taking place among radio folk. They donate personal autographed items to be auctioned off at Victory Bond drives, and as Betty Winkler (Joyce Jordan) so aptly puts it, "If this keeps up I can say literally, I have given my all for my country" . . .

Alan Reed, Solomon Levy in "Abie's Irish Rose," returned from the Coast in Hollywood sartorial splendor—slacks, sports shirt, Mexican huraches and belt with silver ornaments. Ezra Stone and some of his buddies of "This Is the Army" met Alan on the avenue, stopped, stared. Gulped Stone, "Gee, you're not even a civilian" . . .

A deep curtsy to Glenn Miller, who has shipped more than 10,000 records to Army, Navy and Marine training-centers since he introduced his radio series . . .

Al Jolson, who has been saying "No" to English theater managers for years, has at last made his English debut. BUT his audience was pure American—our soldiers stationed there.

Typical of Bob Hope is his most recent "nice" gesture. Bob had been keeping plans for his current Alaskan trip under cover for some time. Press agents and studio publicity men who got wind of it wanted to launch a typical publicity campaign on this benefit Army tour, but Hope said "No." Quietly but firmly Bob put his foot down, saying he wanted no private publicity, no personal gain out of something as serious and important as that. He has made no picture commitments for fear they might interfere with his Army tours. For when Bob returns from Alaska, he will not return to Hollywood. His first broadcast will be from Seattle, his subsequent ones from the cities nearest to the camps he happens to be playing. When it was suggested that his extensive program might be too strenuous, that he should take more time to rest, Bob scoffed, "This is no time to rest. There is too much to do." Bob is setting a fine example for all of us to follow . . .

Turn about. Uniforms cover a multitude of things, and any number of surprises are apt to result from asking a service man about himself. On the USO program in Hollywood, the master of ceremonies, Art Linkletter, gets some half-dozen servicemen up to the mike, tells them to make themselves at ease while he asks the questions, finally allows the boys to convey some message over the air to kin who might be listening. Usually the boys, most of them in front of a mike for the first time, speak very haltingly, but when Mr. Linkletter interviewed an enlisted Marine by the name of Bernard Young, he was amazed at the cool, self-composed manner of the fellow. Imagine Art's chagrin when, in answer to "What did you do before entering the Marine Corps," the fellow beamed, "Just what you're doing now!" Pvt. Young was announcer and M. C. on WTOL in Toledo, Ohio. It was then that Bernard started to take Linkletter over the ropes, much to the boys' delight . . .

Hodgepodge: "The Adventures of Bulldog Drummond" program has been renewed and you will hear it for an additional fourteen weeks . . . Meredith Willson was singled out by the University of Kentucky and lauded on a Coast-to-Coast Mutual program aired by that school . . . Hedda Hopper has been a faithful and regular visitor at the bedside of ailing William Farnum, with whom she made her first movie twenty-five years ago . . . Bill Stern, top sports announcer and commentator, has had so many requests from our boys abroad that his programs will be relayed to American troops in the Pacific regularly.

CHICAGO

Here's a communique for your attention. It's from Captain Wayne King, Special Services Branch, Sixth Service Command, Army of the United States—you've danced to his music in pleasanter years. Says Capt. King:

"You can't begin to realize the amount of enjoyment thousands of young men, your son or husband might be one of them, can have through the use of a saxophone, violin, clarinet, trumpet, trombone, drums or any other instrument. If you'll bring in or send in that instrument for which you have no further use, I'll guarantee it will reach the hearts of many a soldier. You can send it to me: Special Services Branch, New Post Office Building, Chicago. Or write me, care of WGN, Chicago" . . .

Love-songs should flow smoothly from that talented trio, the Dinning Sisters. Sister Jean's a newlywed, Ginger is scheduled to marry September 19, and Lou is just back in town with word of her engagement. Ginger's man is Harry Lutke of the Advertising Research Foundation of Chicago. Lou's wedding is slated for post-war days, for her fiance is still in college. He's an Akron boy, Gene Betz. The trio continues its professional life despite the billing and cooing . . .

Two Chicago radio people it has been a pleasure to know are leaving us—Bob Elson to become a lieutenant senior grade in the Navy and Alex Dreier to replace Robert St. John for a spell as NBC's London reporter. Alex hopes to make a side trip to Moscow, but there are a couple of other capitals which I'm sure Bob would like to visit—and probably will, with some sixteen-inch guns to heave beanballs at the Axis batters . . .

Chicago seems to have a monopoly on the Rosemary role in "Abie's Irish Rose." The new Rosemary is Mercedes McCambridge, who was a favorite here. She's replacing Betty Winkler, also a Chicagoan . . .

We've long had the theory that radio commentators were replacing editors as the chief molders of public opinion. This theory is being tested at the polls in the Midwest this fall. William Hessler, WLW and "Views of the News" commentator, is running for an Ohio congressional seat. And Foster May, news commentator, has resigned from WOW to campaign for a place in Congress . . .

If you should happen to meet a radio program walking down the street in these fall days, you'll be safe to grab his outstretched mike, slap him on his control-room and exclaim, "Many happy returns of the day!" Here's a partial list of the Chicago program anniversaries:

Program	Years on Air	Date

GAIL KUBIK WRITES MUSICAL SCORES FOR OWI DOCUMENTARY FILMS

Courboin Plays Bach's "Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor" Sun;
Casa Loma Band Still Boasts Ten of Original Founding Fathers

By ROBERT BAGAR

New York World-Telegram Music Critic and Associate Program Annotator for Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York

A YOUNG man of twenty-seven, Gail Thompson Kubik, has recently been appointed Music Consultant to the Office of War Information's Film Bureau. His duties will consist of writing musical scores for documentary films and conducting. Mr. Kubik's first achievement in his newly acquired position was to score the Office of War Information's newly released documentary film, "The World at War."

At a special press showing of the film, which surveys the martial scene from the Japanese invasion of Manchuria in 1931 to the bombing of Pearl Harbor in 1941, the listener, if he had any musical instincts at all, was struck by the power and the general expressiveness of the music.

Mr. Kubik, it is evident from the first few measures, knows how to orchestrate. He also knows how to harness interesting rhythmic devices to his purposes. What melody there is to the music—and the subject itself of the film rather discourages its use—is attractive melody.

Born in South Coffeyville, Oklahoma, Mr. Kubik moved, at an early age, across the state line into Kansas, where the family settled down in the neighboring town of Coffeyville. He wasn't particularly interested in music as a boy, though he did show a remarkable talent, being capable of performing interesting things with a violin—thoroughly musical things, too.

He got a flattering offer from the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, which quite suddenly dangled a scholarship before him. Interest or no interest in music, he took it at the insistence of his older brother. His schooling from that time traced a course through a study fellowship with Leo Sowerby at the American Conservatory of Music in Chicago and admission to the Harvard Graduate School, where he worked under Walter Piston.

What do musicians usually do—if they are intelligent—when they come out of school? They teach, which is exactly what Mr. Kubik did. He was barely old enough to vote when he received recognition from the NBC to the extent that a program of his music was played over the radio. He taught advanced composition at Teachers College, Columbia University, but the composing-seed began to sprout seriously within him, and in almost no time at all he was doing important work for NBC.

Being a staff composer for a great radio network had its points—also its labors, because he averaged a score a day for such shows as "Great Plays," "The World Is Yours" and others. Logically enough, Mr. Kubik, far from playing the young dabbler in novelty, betook himself instead to the tried and true musical forms, and endeavored to throw into them his own musical personality by way of modern harmonies and, in general, modern ideas, capable of meeting the specific requirements of each dramatic production.

In the meantime, he found time to write at leisure—that is, not on order—and in that uninhibited frame of mind he penned a number of pieces, some of which earned for him high awards. One of these compositions, his violin concerto, won the Jascha Heifetz prize of $1,000 in 1941.

There is an amusing story connected with the writing of that work. He went one day to a lecture on political science. A little on the bored side, he began to do some musical doodling, jotting down ideas in a very personal shorthand code. He did not know it then, but he had jotted down the themes for his violin concerto.

Some time later, as often happens, he lost interest in the concerto and he found use for the pages of manuscript by sending them as Christmas cards to his friends. Came the change of heart, and he patiently wrote each and every one of said friends, asking them to return the pages. Mr. Kubik has many friends and they are situated all over the map of America. Fortunately they wrote back.

Mr. Kubik's connection with film music dates from a score of his written for the United States Maritime Commission release, "Men and Ships." He wrote that in two weeks. It proved good enough to qualify him for his present work.

The young musician is very serious about composing now. He has tasted success, which should prove the whet-ter of the appetite. He still believes firmly in the importance of form in music, reasoning that the best possible ideas would be as nothing if they were not expressed in a logical manner—hence, form.

"I do not approve of empty cleverness in music or in anything else, for that matter," he says earnestly, "any more than I would approve of over-stuffed dullness. There must be progress in any art for the continuance of that art, and the artist must be infinitely alive to the subtle changes going on around him all the time. At the same time we cannot afford to dispense with the wonderful traditions in music; in fact, they must be reckoned as the guides to a future that we may merely guess at."

Bach and the Organ

Bach wrote the greatest part of his organ works at Weimar during the nine years between 1708 and 1717. There are over two hundred such works, the most numerous of which are the choral preludes, of which 143 are known.

The Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor, originally written for a two-manual clavicembalo, was transcribed for organ during the latter part of the period mentioned above. Bach used as half his theme a phrase from a Trio en passacaille by Andre Raison, who was an organist at a Paris church during the reign of Louis XIV. The word passacaglia first meant a Spanish or Italian dance in triple time whose theme was repeated frequently. When it became appropriated by composers it signified a composition whose structure was built on the same idea of a recurring theme. The fugue accompanying this passacaglia is built of material from the preceding section added to new material. It is a double fugue.

(Charles Courboin, noted organist, plays the "Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor" besides other music, NBC on Sunday, September 27.)

Concert Records

Columbia offers John Barbirolli and the Philharmonic-Symphony in an engaging version of the theme and variations from the Tchaikowsky Suite No. 3 in G. The composer's bristling ideas and his marvelous inventiveness are all too evident here. Mr. Barbirolli has been playing the suite or excerpts from it a good deal at his concerts of the past few years. That should make him an authority on it.

Glen Gray: His leadership impressed listeners

THIRTEEN years ago a band of youthful jazzists who called themselves the "Orange Blossoms" was one of the units in a large dance-music organization headed by Jean Goldkette. It made a stand at a hotel by the name of Casa Loma, and the sound of the words was so appealing that the band decided to keep the title.

It is curious to note that for a number of years the Casa Loma Orchestra played without benefit of batonist. All the musicians needed was a few tempo taps on the drum and they were off. When Glen Gray, a tall, personable chap, one day led the men from the front—with a baton—he made an impression on listeners. He became recognized as the executive personality of the orchestra, and in a short time the musicians decided that he should be the one to lead them permanently, especially since he had made such a hit with the fans.

Moving Gray from the sax section to the podial spotlight proved a good stunt, for with a definite personality at its head the band made rapid progress. Not the least important reason for its success is the fact that it tried to create trends instead of slavishly following them. And another secret of the Casa Lomas' come-uppance has been their versatility, the special gifts they have for playing well, whether in strictly straight mood or in the hottest jive consciousness.

Not for nothing has this group of tootlers and pounders been able to remain close to the top of the popularity ladder, for they have known their share of work and disappointments; but, perhaps, because the band's personnel boasts the presence of ten of the original founding fathers, the unit functions as evenly and as precisely as it does.

Currently performing at New York's smart Pennsylvania Hotel, the Casa Loma Orchestra broadcasts four times weekly over the Blue Network. In mid-October the band goes on tour and will return to Gotham in time to observe an annual custom—Christmas week at Paramount Theater, temple of motion pictures and dance music.

Glen Gray and the Casa Loma Orchestra have been making records for many years. Decca's archives proudly list a great number of performances which are unique in point of velvety ensemble work, in addition to completely effective solo playing by any or all the instrumentalists.

Valiant Lady

"Not personally," Pamela replied. "Unless I miss my guess, Joan, she's merely interested in what she can get out of him, and naturally, she can get much more if they're married. Please believe me, my dear."

Joan told Pamela about how she had seen Cookie at Pierre's and the threats Cookie had made.

"She has a weird idea that I might do something to pry Jeff away from her," Joan explained. "She threatened to do all sorts of things, too; telling the newspapers about me, and—well, she just wants to be sure that I won't interfere."

"Well," said Pamela, "she can hope from now until doomsday, but if she thinks she's going to marry Jeff, she's dead wrong. I don't know what I'm going to do yet, but it's going to be something. And whatever it is, you can be darned sure that that marriage will never take place! I'll work it somehow so that Cookie will be out of this town in a week. And you can take my word for it!"

Joan knew that Pamela Stanley meant what she said. But she also knew that Margie Cook meant what she said, too. Cookie had promised her that if anything were to happen to her intended marriage, every newspaper in the country would hear about the trumped-up engagement between Joan and Jeffrey Clark. Publicity was the one thing Joan Scott couldn't stand at this time. With the public spotlight turned on her, it would be only too easy for the police to find her.

Joan made it a point to see Thomas R. Clark the next day after he had eaten his lunch on the terrace. She told him what Pamela had said the evening before and warned him that if he and Pamela tried to keep Jeff and Cookie apart, the former chorus girl might be able to do considerable harm. Clark dismissed the whole thing with a wave of his hand.

"If she ever decided to do anything like that," he said, "there'd always be one trick left in the deck. It's something I've been using for a long time—money. I know you don't approve of it." He chuckled. "I remember the calling down you gave me when I tried to offer it to you. But believe me, my dear, money has never failed me."

"And how," Joan asked, "do you suppose Jeff is going to take this? Aren't you asking for a new batch of trouble from him? You know he's going to resent Pamela's interference. And then, if Cookie finds out that the entire family is working against her, she may play her cards differently. She may even work it so that she and Jeffrey are married at once."

Clark just laughed. Then he leaned confidently across the table. He asked Joan to use her influence with Jeff to break up the affair. Joan stood up, her eyes flashing. She absolutely refused to interfere.

"It seems to me," she said, "that ever since I've been in this house I've been getting myself deeper and deeper into a situation that's no concern or business of mine. It seems all I do is LEFT ALONE in the enormous dining-room, Joan sat erect and proud in her chair. Somehow she managed to choke down the better portion of her fruit juice. But the butler noticed two bitter tears rolling down her cheeks jump from the fire into the frying-pan and then back again. Now, Mr. Clark, I'll continue to try to keep up appearances and do everything that I believe is necessary to make this masquerade seem believable. But I will not deliberately entangle myself in an intimate family affair. I'm not going to have anything to do with Margie Cook, and that's final!"

With that, Joan turned on her heels and marched off the terrace, her face flushed with anger. By the time she had reached her own suite, in the opposite wing of the house, she had decided more than ever it was necessary for her to steer clear of Margie Cook. It was impossible to explain to Mr. Clark, but Joan knew that if Cookie gave out the story to the newspapers, every policeman in Chicago would be after her an hour after publication. She was certain that if she received any great amount of publicity, her chances of working to clear Tubby's name would be lost.

Joan returned to her room to find Nelson, the butler, waiting for her. There was a telephone call from Miss Cook. Joan picked up the receiver. Cookie told Joan that Jeff had invited her to dinner on Monday evening at the Clark home and she wanted Joan to come over to the hotel and advise her what to wear. Joan couldn't refuse.

She did her best to excuse herself, but Cookie was insistent.

"How you act at that dinner isn't my business," Joan said.

"Now, wait a minute," Cookie argued. "In a way it isn't, and in a way it is. I don't want to use that old 'or else' line on you, but if you don't want to play ball with me, I can still hike over to the newspapers and spill the story."

"I hadn't forgotten that, Cookie."

"Well, I'm glad of it. Now, I'm gonna take your advice on how to behave at this dinner, but, believe me, if you give me a bum steer—"

Joan went to the Beach-water Hotel and gave Cookie careful advice on what to wear and what jewelry not to wear. Advice on how to act, walk and talk. Meanwhile, Jeffrey Clark sailed into his father's office at the Chicago Dispatch building and plopped into a chair. Clark regarded his son with stern eyes, remarked how well he was looking since Joan had been living at the Clark home. Jeff tried to pass off the compliment by saying that his chasing days were over.

"I'm not a lady-killer any more," he said. "From now on I'm a one-woman man."

"And—ah—Miss Cook is the woman?"

"Of course."

"Oh," Clark said sourly, but Jeff chose to disregard his father's ill humor.

"By the way," he said, "I took you up on what you said the other afternoon. I've invited Cookie over for dinner Monday."

Clark tried to back down. He didn't want Cookie at his home and he wished now that he'd never made the proposal that Joan Scott had suggested. Jeff sensed what was going on in his father's mind.

"Now, just a moment, Dad," he said. "A few days ago you told me to ask Cookie to dinner. You said you'd be glad to see her and have a talk with her. Why the sudden turn about?"

Jeff stood up, walked over to his father's desk, looked into his father's eyes.

"Let me tell you something, Dad. I don't care whether you or anyone else objects to Cookie. She's coming to our house for dinner Monday night and that's that!"

Jeff picked up his hat and left his father's office. The dinner date was going to go off and Clark and Pamela would have to stand it whether they wanted to or not.

But on Monday afternoon, a few hours before the scheduled dinner for Miss Cook at the Clark mansion, there was another blow-up. Jeff had stopped at Joan's room to thank her for coaching Cookie for the occasion, and Brennan, Clark's secretary, overheard the conversation. He took the news back to Clark and the old man blew up. He dropped everything and came to Joan's room. Jeff and Joan still were talking when he burst in on them.

"Joan," he almost shouted, "just exactly what kind of game do you think you're playing with me?"

"Game?" cried Joan, taken aback. "Why, Mr. Clark, I—I don't understand."

"Perhaps," snapped Clark, "you'd like me to be a little more explicit."

BBC BROADCAST DIRECTS ANTI-NAZI DEMONSTRATION IN MARSEILLES

Germans Complain of Russian Resistance; NBC Lines Up More Shows for Troops Overseas; No Essential Food Shortage in Britain Reported

France Is Listening

ACCORDING to "London Calling," evidence of European listeners' response to BBC broadcasts continues to reach London. The ingenious ways in which it gets to this country will make thrilling reading at such time as it may be disclosed. The fourteenth of July celebrations in France afford an illustration of listeners' response. At Marseilles, where the population demonstrated in their thousands, the police opened fire on the crowd, killing four people. Two of them were women. The BBC French service announced this on the sixteenth, adding that the funeral of the two women was to take place at 2 p.m. on the seventeenth. The authorities, having become alarmed, changed the time of the ceremony. At 1:15 p.m. on Sunday, July 19, a message was broadcast from London that at 5 p.m. that afternoon Marseilles patriots should assemble at the gates of St. Pierre cemetery. Then followed detailed instructions. At 5 p.m. precisely an enormous crowd assembled at the appointed place. For an hour flowers and tricolors were simply showered on the two graves. Not a sound broke the silence of this solemn manifestation.

From the Loudspeaker

H. C. Knickerbocker, famous war correspondent, speaking from London the other night, asserted that there is no shortage of the essential foods in Britain. There are enough potatoes so that each man could eat three pounds a day if necessary, he said. . . . According to Bern, Switzerland, radio, Germans are complaining about the stubborn resistance of their foes in the Caucasus. Even after you kill a Russian soldier you have to knock him over before he is finished, they say. . . . Also according to Bern, eleven hundred French children, who have been in Switzerland recuperating and resting up, are now returning to Paris by way of Geneva and unoccupied France. . . . William Holt, regular speaker of the London station, mentioned that since candy is rationed in Britain, many children are buying throat lozenges, as they are the only sweet things they can now get. . . . Fred Cuhel, speaking from Melbourne recently, mentioned the fact that 437 Japanese planes have been brought down or destroyed by the allies since Pearl Harbor.

Shows for Troops Overseas

Several new air shows produced especially for reception by our fighting men overseas have been introduced recently by NBC International. These include:

Saturdays at 10:30 a.m. (Tuesdays at 10:30 p.m.)—"Highlights from Hollywood." An

"Meet Your Navy," the weekly half-hour show originating at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station near Chicago, which features commissioned and enlisted personnel of the U. S. Navy, including a two-hundred-voice choir, the Great Lakes Naval Training Station Rhythm Orchestra, and Lieut. Commander Eddie Peabody, banjo king, is now broadcast to the forces overseas Saturdays at 11:30 a.m. CWT over NBC stations WRCA (15.15) and WBOS (15.21).

The new "Johnny Presents" show, starring popular Ginny Simms as mistress of ceremonies, which made its fall debut on September 13, is being short-waved to our boys overseas each Sunday at 12:15 p.m. CWT by NBC over WRCA (15.15) and WBOS (15.21).

Special half-hour play-by-play dramatizations of each of the games in the World Series will be radiated for our troops abroad by NBC International. The exact time for these broadcasts will be announced on the Sunday preceding the series at 12:45 p.m. CWT over WRCA (15.15) and WBOS (15.21).

Add: BBC North American Service

The North American Service of the BBC from London is still being broadcast over GSC (9.50), GSD (11.75) and GRH (9.825) from 4:15 to 11:45 p.m. CWT. GRG (11.68) now signs off at 8:40 p.m., while GSL (6.11) picks up the program at 9:00 p.m. GRM (7.125) relays the North American program from 9:45 p.m. on; GRS (7.07) and GRW (6.145) from 10:00 p.m. on. In addition, GSF (15.14) and GRY (9.60) carry the North American Service from 4:15 to 5:15 p.m. CWT. All of these various frequencies provide the listener with a wide choice, which should give satisfactory reception of the London programs under almost any conditions.

Meet Nicholas J. Polydouris

Nicholas J. Polydouris is a handsome twenty-seven-year-old Greek-American with a personal grudge against the Axis, for he had two brothers in the Greek army whom he hasn't heard from since December 24, 1940, and can only guess their fate.

LATIN AMERICA learns about the U. S. from them. Their vehicle is a short-wave dramatic series in Spanish, patterned after NBC's popular "Pan-American Holiday." U. S. cities, culture, history and industry are described. L. to r.: Rosita Gonzalez Ginorio, Rafael Carvajal, Raul de Leon

A former director and general teacher in the Greek Orthodox Community school of Albany, New York, he now works six days a week in one of the defense plants of General Electric; broadcasts on Sundays from 3:00 to 3:30 p.m. CWT in Greek to his enslaved countrymen in Greece over Schenectady station WGEA (15.33). The young Greek-American came to this country only eight years ago, but he already is a citizen and "very proud of it." Three weeks before Pearl Harbor, Nick walked into the office of John R. Sheehan, manager of the General Electric short-wave stations. "I think," declared the slender, well-mannered visitor, "that it would be a great opportunity for me to broadcast your Greek programs. There is nothing I would rather do more." He explained that these programs hurdle the Nazis' tight censorship to counteract Axis propaganda by giving the Greek people the straight news—good and bad. "In addition," he said, "such broadcasts are of invaluable help in keeping up the courage of the oppressed Greeks by assuring them of their coming liberation by the United Nations." Nick went on the air the next Sunday for his first broadcast. He hasn't missed a Sunday since, and although he hasn't received any letters direct from Greece as yet, he is sure many people are secretly listening to him and passing the news to others despite the threat of a firing-squad if caught. He has heard from Greek nationals in almost every other part of the world. To a man, they enthusiastically endorse his efforts.

News About the Stations

A new short-wave station located at Harbin, Manchuria, is being heard daily to 9:07 a.m. CWT broadcasting in Russian on a frequency of 6.03 megs. . . . Note: In our regular program listings we ordinarily only include those London programs which are featured in the North American transmission of the BBC. However, in London's Eastern and African transmissions are many interesting programs that are directed to and audible in this country. In next week's issue we will list the more popular of these programs together with the frequencies upon which they can be heard. Reserve your copy now.

To Film "Great 'G'"

The name and fame of "Great Gildersleeve" now is being transmitted to the screen. Harold Peary, who plays the character on the Sunday radio series, went to work at RKO in his first starring comedy picture based on "The Great Gildersleeve" broadcast and bearing the same title.

It's the first picture of a series for which RKO recently signed Peary. He will make two pictures a year for the studio for the next three years.

Peary also appeared for RKO with Fibber McGee and Molly and Bergen and McCarthy in "Look Who's Laughing" and "Here We Go Again" and was featured with Victor Mature and Lucille Ball in "Seven Days Leave."

FORECAST
 Maurice English, chief of the editorial department of the NBC International Division, has written an article, "The Coming European Civil War," for the October issue of Free World magazine. English predicts a generalized European civil war after collapse of the Nazi regime. He contends that the Soviet Union and the United States will have to agree on a European program to keep the continent from just wearing itself out.

Play Up Your Posture

—Charmante
PERFECT LANDING is a posture art. Helena Rubenstein suggests the method shown above. Place one foot behind the other. Keep your tummy in and your hips tucked under. Then you ease into the chair gracefully

POSTURE BEAUTY must be learned. At left, Ann Delafield, director of the Richard Hudnut Success School, teaches her pupils grace through the trick of balancing books on heads

WHETHER you are fourteen or forty, tall or short, generously curved or slender as a reed, you are only as beautiful as your posture. And when the season's newest creation finds you looking like a worn-out, bumpy mattress, it's time to snap yourself into shape! So stand as straight as a Greek column. Remember you have a spine and use it to keep yourself in line.

Try visualizing yourself as being suspended by the ears. Then place your heels against the wall . . . bend your knees slightly so every possible part of your anatomy touches the wall . . . then, slowly—oh, so slowly—pull yourself up to your greatest height. Presto! Your chin is up, your shoulders squared off, and the rear protrusion is tucked neatly under the hip-bones. What's more, you look as regal as a queen!

But you feel awkward and uncomfortable? It's no wonder! For months, perhaps even years, you have been slouching around letting one set of muscles slide completely out of shape and cramping others so badly they couldn't even cry "uncle." And there is no time like the immediate moment to fire that lazy body with a little ambition. Try touching the floor with your finger-tips. Chances are you didn't make it that time, but you have started a set of muscles working the right way. So make it a "must" and a habit to exercise fifteen minutes in the morning and fifteen minutes at night every single day. Try every conceivable exercise you've ever heard of—and stretch those muscles long and limber.

However, just standing at attention and in perfect alignment is only half the battle! So how about it? Do you plop down in a chair like a sand-bag dropped from a hundred-foot level, or do you ease yourself down in perfect control? At any rate, let's give the right way a try. Place a straight-backed chair in the middle of the room and stand directly in front of it. Put one foot behind the other. Keep your stomach in and your hips tucked under. Now gracefully sit down. Did you keep your back straight and your head erect? Are your hands relaxed in your lap? If so, you've made a perfect landing! Now try rising by applying the same rules and using your back foot as leverage. Then every time you see a chair, practise this routine for a lesson in grace.

And now for your method of locomotion! Many—far too many—women either hobble along like a badly jointed wooden doll or lope like an animal.

So sneak a quick look in a full-length mirror as you happen by. And regardless of what you see, don't be discouraged, for really you can recapture the natural grace and carriage you had as a child. It's simply a repetition of the same old thing—practising the right way. This time choose the largest volume you can find in your book-case. Then, after pulling yourself up from the tip of your spine, carefully balance the book on top of your head. Point your toes forward—and start walking! Remember . . . smooth action from the hips. If that book slides off your head, you are either strutting or slumping. So once again balance the book and give it another try. Betcha took three steps that time instead of two. And the next time, you'll probably take four, then five. Soon you'll be going all over the house and up and down steps with your book firmly planted on top of your cranium.

And before many weeks roll by, you'll no longer resemble a comic caricature with rusty joints. Get yourself "prettied up," but first remember to smooth away any obvious bumps with a Hickory foundation garment. Then carry yourself with grace, wear your clothes with dignity, and you'll command attention and admiration wherever you go!

trailing 2-1, have the bases full with only one out. Cronin motions Cliff Bolton, utility catcher, off the bench to hit for the pitcher. The Giant infield goes into a mid-diamond huddle, finally scatters to position, and it is noted that they are playing in close, obviously to cut off the run, the tying run, at the plate.

Suddenly there appears a little fellow out of one corner of the Giant dugout, gesticulating frantically. Play is held up, and Chuck Dressen, utility infielder of the Giants, trots out to manager Bill Terry. Dressen is a faded veteran whom the Giants called in late in the season in an emergency. He isn't even eligible to compete in the series.

They stand out there in the middle of the infield—Dressen and the Giant infield... talking. Then Dressen turns and trots back to the dugout, and the Giant infield returns to its positions, only this time it is noted the quartet plays back on the grass. They're shooting now for the double play. And it comes—lightning fast... Ryan to Critz to Terry. The game is over—the New York Giants hold another world's championship—by right of conquest. Or maybe, by right of Chuck Dressen.

For the little utility infielder had dictated the strategy to be used in a crucial spot. He remembered Bolton from the Southern Association—remembered him as a slow-footed fellow who was very likely to beat a low pitch into the dirt for a double play. That this winning bit of baseball should be dictated by a player who wasn't even eligible for the series, who sat completely forgotten in one corner of the dugout through the previous four games, who couldn't possibly be figured into any advance estimates of the battle is completely in keeping with what we've been trying to get across all the way—WORLD SERIES DOPE IS DOPEY.

Question Service

Miss H. MacIntyre, Rushville, Ind.—You won't be hearing WAYNE KING on the air for quite some time now, as he is now a part of the U. S. Army with a commission as captain. He will be doing work as a specialist. The Waltz King was born in Savanna, Illinois, on February 18, 1901. Wayne's mother died when he was seven and later the family moved to Oklahoma and then to Texas. At the age of fifteen, his father gave him a clarinet, with which he tooted his way through Valparaiso University. Landing a job in Chicago with four dollars in his pocket, King practised saxophone into his pillow at night in his room in the YMCA. When he asked Al Short at the Tivoli Theater for a job—he got it—and developed rapidly. The Aragon ballroom managers asked King to form his own orchestra, and his dreamy waltz music clicked from the beginning. He's the composer of many songs, is most famous for his theme, "The Waltz You Saved for Me." King owns his own plane, plays golf and fishes, honestly dislikes publicity, is five feet nine inches tall, weighs about 160 pounds, has blue eyes, brown hair, is married and has several children... We all wish him much luck.

WHAT'S COOKING!

By GEORGIA SCOTT

When the Career Woman Turns Chef

THERE comes many a time in a career gal's life when she is called upon to exercise her efficiency and cleverness via the kitchen! So when you can no longer avoid the issue of inviting the office pals or your "hen session" chums over for dinner, do it with confidence—yes, even gusto!

Handling a small group for dinner is no more difficult than coping with the stiffest problem the "boss" ever threw your way. And how did you solve it? Sure enough! You carefully planned every step of that assignment and finished the job with a glorious sense of satisfaction. So start out this problem of guests for dinner by first planning a simple menu. And incidentally, if you develop the habit of clipping recipes as you happen to see an interesting one, your menu-planning becomes a simple process. Here are a couple of ideas:

|-------------------------------|----------------|
| Roast Pork, Apple Sauce | |
| Whipped Potatoes | Buttered Peas |
| Lettuce Salad, with Dressing | |
| Peach Shortcake | Coffee |
| or | |
| Spaghetti or Baked Beans | |
| Celery | Ripe Olives |
| | Spiced Peaches |
| Buttered Italian Bread Sticks | |
| Frozen Charlotte | Small Cakes |
| | Coffee |

Once you have decided what you are going to serve those expectant, hungry mouths, take stock of the cupboard. It's a wise gal who keeps the shelves lined with all sorts of necessary staples, including canned fruits and vegetables. Then when welcome—but uninvited—guests come around, you can always turn an uninteresting can of cut corn into a delectable dish by simply adding chopped pimiento or by tossing in a few peanuts when you cream the peas.

At any rate, make a list of all the groceries you'll need for your prospective dinner and do your shopping the day before. This will eliminate

ABOVE: Margaret Johnson, arranger and singer with the Song-spinners Quartet on WOR, spends all her spare time in the kitchen

TREAT for sweet-tooths that does not raid sugar rations are quick-frozen peaches (right). They are sliced, sweetened before freezing seals in flavor holes in the budget for those who are prone to rush from the office to pick up expensive chops or steaks. Then if you have selected a roast as a headliner on your menu, partially cook it one night and finish it the next. No fuss, no bother!

Frozen foods are another time-saver, for they have already been cleaned. However, if you should prefer fresh vegetables, clean them the night before and tuck them away in the refrigerator for future reference. Salad ingredients should be cleaned and lined up at the same time. And incidentally, if you plan to serve French dressing, add a tiny pinch of curry powder, and listen to your guests "oh and ah" over a new and indescribable flavor.

For dessert, we suggest either the peach shortcake or frozen charlotte. You'll find that frozen desserts are no effort at all, for you can start preparations in the morning while your bathwater is running. By the time breakfast dishes are dried, your creation will be finished and stored away in the freezing-compartment. Here's how!

Frozen Charlotte

- 1½ teaspoons gelatin
 - ¼ cup cold water
 - 2 cups heavy cream, whipped
 - ½ cup confectioners' sugar
 - 1 cup finely chopped pecans
 - 2 tablespoons Marsala
- Macaroons

Soak gelatin in cold water and dissolve over hot water. Fold gelatin into cream; add sugar, nuts and flavoring. Stir well to make certain that gelatin is evenly distributed. Line the sides of small molds with macaroons and pour in mixture. Place molds in freezing-trays and put tray in freezing-compartment of refrigerator. Will serve six.

So no five-o'clock jitters for this chef! You can calmly wander home, confident that your dinner will proceed with the smoothness of a banquet. There will be plenty of time to freshen yourself, set an attractive table, and go feminine in a frilly apron. Then, when your first guest arrives, you will be coolly immaculate, perfectly poised, and leisurely efficient in your final preparation of dinner.

Valiant Lady

He paused and looked at Jeff and Joan, who sat staring at him with astonished eyes. He disregarded his son and continued to storm at Joan. "You told me that if I allowed him to see enough of Cookie, he'd get tired of her." Clark's voice changed to one of deep sarcasm. "Oh," he said, "he's tired of Cookie all right! So tired that he's bringing her to dinner despite the fact that I asked him not to. And to top it off, you, Joan, the one who gave me this advice, now you do your best to—"

Jeff's face became pale with anger. He looked at Joan with anger in his eyes.

"I thought the two of you were on my side," he said bitterly. "You told me you were, Joan. And, Dad, you had me believing for a while there that you really were going to try to like Cookie. What a laugh that was! You've had your mind made up to hate her right from the first! But I didn't think that you were in on it, too, Joan. I didn't have the slightest notion that this whole idea was yours. Well, I'm going to show you that I can be as stubborn as anyone else in this house! I promised Cookie that I'd bring her here to dinner tonight, and that's just what I'm going to do!"

JEFF left, slamming the door behind him. Clark turned on Joan. "Now," he said, "just tell me why you decided to make a lady out of Cookie."

"I'm sorry, Mr. Clark," Joan said firmly, "but I had reasons for doing that. My own reasons."

"Your reasons?"

"Yes," Joan said. "Mine!" Then she let him have it. "You see," she said, "I have some sort of life, too. And what I do about it and how I run it is my concern! You can't understand that, though, because you're much too impressed by your own affairs! You're so self-centered that when your son wants to bring the girl he plans to marry to see you, you threaten and bully and spout like a volcano!"

"Well," Clark roared, "it's nothing compared to what Miss Cook will receive! If she dares to come here tonight, I'll make it so difficult for her that she'll be sorry she ever set foot in this house!"

"Yes," warned Joan, "and you'll bring on exactly what you're trying to avoid. Don't do anything you'll be sorry for, Mr. Clark. Don't do anything you'll regret."

But Clark didn't take Joan's advice. He listened to Pamela, and together they quietly left the house by another door just as Margie Cook and Jeffrey came in the front. Dinner was ready and waiting, but Jeff's father wasn't on hand to greet the girl his son planned to marry. Cookie sensed what was wrong and so did Joan, who had dressed for the occasion and tried her best to make Cookie feel at ease. Jeff was tense and nervous. He tried to make excuses while they waited in the drawing-room, but the excuses wore thin. His voice became high-pitched with anger and he left the room to go upstairs to find out why his father and Pamela weren't coming down.

Cookie began pacing the floor and her eyes flashed with anger.

"You don't have to explain," she told Joan. "They're giving me the cold shoulder. They're telling me they don't want me! Well, I'll pay them back for it. I'll pay them back for every snub they ever gave me. I don't give a hoot what they think about me. As long as I've got that young punk of theirs—"

"Young—?" Joan was astonished. She hardly realized what Cookie was saying.

"Jeffrey," shouted Cookie. "That's who I mean. As long as I've got him, they can all go fly a kite!"

"Cookie," asked Joan in a quiet even voice, "are you in love with Jeff? Are you?"

"No," Cookie replied smugly. "I'm no more in love with him than with a pup in the alley. The way I feel now, I could scratch his eyes out. And I'm not angry with him. I'm sick of him. I'm sick of looking at that dumb face of his. But I'm not going to let that stand in the way of marrying him. I'm gonna live in a big house—this one—and have breakfast in bed. I'm gonna buy everything I want. You bore me, Scott, with your talk of love. In fact, so does this whole conversation and, by the way, you needn't bother to tell Jeff what I've been saying. He wouldn't believe you anyway."

Joan bit her lip. She knew what Cookie had said was true. And now Cookie was hunting for her wraps.

"You can tell Jeffrey I got tired of waitin'," she said. "And also tell him that I never expect to come back here until I get an apology from his father. I'm going back to my hotel. He can reach me there."

Jeff was wild-eyed with anger when he returned to the drawing-room and Joan told him that Cookie had left.

"I've taken a beating in this house for so long I'd almost forgotten that I have certain rights!" he cried. "My father has treated me like one of his properties for so many years that now he doesn't even take my feelings into consideration. Well, I'm tired of it. And I'm not going to put up with this house or the man who owns it any longer."

Jeff walked out the front door. Joan, who had tried to straighten things out by ordering dinner served to her and Jeff, was left alone in the enormous dining-room. The reflected light from the tall, thin yellow candles on the table danced on every piece of silver, on every glass and goblet. Somehow she managed to choke down the better portion of her fruit juice. She sat in her chair, erect, straight, proud, but when the butler took away the glass he noticed two bitter tears rolling down her cheeks.

"Shall I serve the next course now, Miss Scott?" Nelson asked kindly.

"No," Joan said in a choked, strained voice. "No, please don't—I—I don't think I'm hungry any more."

The glass slipped from her fingers, struck a dish, and water spilled across the white napery. It was the last straw.

"Oh," she said, "I'm sorry I spilled that, Nelson, I—ruined the cloth, didn't I?" Her voice broke. "I—I seem to have ruined everything."

IT WAS worse the next morning. Jeff had called his father, informed him that he and Cookie were going to elope. Clark blamed Joan for everything. He stormed at her and abused her. Joan stood up under the abuse. She tried to point out that it was Clark's own bull-headedness that had caused Jeff's sudden decision. Then he told Joan that he was going to try to buy Cookie off and went storming out of the house.

But Clark didn't get to first base with Cookie.

"Get outta here," she ordered. "Get outta here before I start throwing things. I'm gonna marry that son of yours, Mr. Clark, and you're gonna like it!"

Clark left. There was nothing else he could do. He was beaten. He didn't know that Joan, although she had no reason whatever to do it, had decided to make one last effort to argue Cookie into leaving Jeff.

Cookie was having a manicure when Joan arrived at the Beachwater and Cookie suggested that Joan go up to her room.

Margie Cook's suite was a shambles. Trunks, suit-cases, hat-boxes and other necessities of traveling were strewn about. Joan placed herself in a chair and waited. Suddenly the telephone rang. Joan looked at it, not knowing whether to answer it or not. The ringing was insistent. In the hope that the call would be Jeffrey and she might be able to convince him to forego this marriage, Joan walked to the telephone.

It was New York calling long distance. Joan refused to accept the message, but the caller was insistent. Joan finally took the call. It was Cookie's lawyer. And what he said brought a big smile to Joan's face. She knew that everything was going to be all right.

The lawyer told her to tell Cookie that the clerk of court had made a mistake—that her divorce wasn't final! Cookie was still married! She couldn't marry Jeff now, no matter what happened. Cookie was beaten and Joan knew it.

When Cookie came back to her room, she found Joan stern-lipped and waiting.

"Not very long ago," said Joan, "you threatened me. You used a very catchy phrase. I haven't forgotten it. Now, I'm going to say it to you: 'I don't want to use the—the "or else" line,' but you give up Jeff—"

Then she told Cookie about the telephone call.

"You're lyin'!" Cookie cried. "You're lyin', aren't you? Go on. Say it! Say you're lyin'!"

Her hands were doubled into tight little fists. A moment ago she had been smug, confident in the fact that she was going to marry Jeffrey Clark. Then a word from Joan, and Margie Cook blanched, recoiled, cracked. She knew she was whipped.

Joan told Cookie she'd have to go back to New York without Jeff, and Cookie knew that Joan was telling the truth. She took the train that afternoon. That was the reason she didn't meet Jeff at the airport as they had planned. Instead of Cookie, Joan was waiting at the airport. He was surprised, then crestfallen when Joan told him the truth and tried to comfort him. He suddenly realized that he hadn't loved Cookie and that he had been going through the motions of marrying her just to spite his father. He realized a lot of things. Joan told him about her own troubles, about how she was trying to clear her husband's name and her own. Jeff promised to help her as much as she had helped him.

They shook hands on the bargain. Joan Scott had found a new ally, a new friend she knew she could trust. She knew in her heart that with luck and nerve she could find a way to solve her own problems. She took Jeff's arm and they left the airport together.

Jeff looked down at the pretty girl at his side. He admired her trim figure, her clear eyes, the touch of firmness about her mouth. He tried to think of a word that would describe this girl who never gave up, who never admitted defeat. Only one word seemed to fill the bill. Joan Scott was—valiant.

The End

Continue the thrilling story of "Valiant Lady," written by Howard Teichmann, by listening to the broadcast over CBS Monday through Friday at 10 a.m. EWT, 9 CWT, 9:30 a.m. MWT, 8:30 PWT, under the sponsorship of General Mills for Bisquick and Gold Medal Flour.

The Movie Front

of Knickerbocker Village on the Hudson . . .

Hardy perennial is the famous play "Rain." Now Marlene Dietrich is scheduled to do the role of Sadie Thompson, the fourth over a period of twenty years. Jeanne Eagels made the part famous in the Broadway play, and both Joan Crawford and Gloria Swanson did screen versions. In the past the plot, which is on the risqué side, managed to get by the censors; but we wonder just how producers are going to twist it this time to meet the rigid requirements of the Hays office and tone down siren Marlene's appeal, as she has a positive genius for injecting "oomph" into the most innocuous scenes. We predict a full quota of headaches before the show is ready for the public . . .

Too bad! Mickey Rooney and his Ava have separated after a whirlwind romance and marriage that began less than nine months ago. Now divorce proceedings have begun. Said Mrs. Rooney when queried: "Conditions haven't been happy for some time," adding sensibly, "and I think the best thing to do is to get the whole thing over with as quickly as possible." Mickey made no comment. Once again a Hollywood marriage lands on the divorce rocks . . .

Spiked! Judy Garland and Dave

Rose, who have been victims of separation rumors, have no such idea in mind. Judy's illness is the answer to Dave's appearances alone; in fact, she was sicker than anyone suspected, and the studio insisted on keeping it quiet. Now Judy's up and around again and coming along fine, there won't be any comment on Dave's solo appearances. Incidentally, Dave's preparing to join up in airplane mechanics, a spot where the United States is badly in need of manpower, just as soon as he can qualify . . .

This and That: Michele Morgan and Bill Marshall have had their marriage license for quite a spell, but as this is written they haven't used it yet . . . Charles Chaplin, a British subject originally, has never become an American citizen . . . "Dead End Kid" Billy Hallop took a monthly salary cut of $3,950 when he joined the Army as a private . . . Rumor has it that Linda Darnell will marry Pev Marley . . . Olivia de Havilland, after being conked on the head with a tomato-can in her "Princess O'Rourke" role, took a week-end off to go fishing, and returned with a case of poison oak . . . Edmond O'Brien goes into the Army as soon as he finishes "Forever Yours." Brother Bill is already a corporal in an artillery unit . . . Gene Tierney, visiting husband Oleg Cassini, now in the Coast Guard, wondered why he was so stiff and formal until she was reminded that she was wearing her Naval Aid Auxiliary lieutenant's uniform, and Oleg, just a gob, had to stand at attention!

MEET MRS. JOHN DOE

Mrs. Doe felt very, very hurt.
 John completely forgot their tenth anniversary!
 She had worn her new dress,
 And had carefully made-up, with just
 The right shade of powder and lipstick —
 But he merely remarked that she looked
 "A little tired around the eyes".
 After a good cry, she took stock of herself —
 Her eyelashes had become wispy
 And her brows were a puzzle!
 No wonder she looked tired and washed-out.
 That very day she read about MAYBELLINE
 Just as you are doing —
 And look at Mrs. Doe NOW!

MORAL: It's a wise wife who keeps a pretty eye on her husband!

Mrs. Doe's lashes now appear long, dark and lovely, with a few simple brush-strokes of MAYBELLINE MASCARA (solid or cream form—both are non-smarting and tear-proof).

Mrs. Doe's eyebrows now have character and expression, thanks to the smooth-marking MAYBELLINE EYEBROW PENCIL.

For a subtle touch of added charm, Mrs. Doe blends a bit of creamy MAYBELLINE EYE SHADOW on her eyelids—her eyes appear sparkling and more colorful!

Give your eyes compelling beauty... be sure you get genuine MAYBELLINE, the Eye Make-up in Good Taste.
